THE PREFACE

TO THE

FIRST EDITION.

IT is not every Period of Time, not every King's or Cæſar's Reign, that furniſhes Matter ſufficient for an Hiſtory. Tacitus in one Place profeſſes he cannot meet with any thing, unleſs he ſhould ſtuff out a Volume in commending the Foundation, or the huge Timber that Cæſar employed at the building his Amphitheatre. Elſewhere he complains of his being ſtraitned and kept down, the Times affording nothing notable beſides the Corruption of Judges, the Encouragement of Informers, Subornations and malicious Proſecutions, Treachery, and Trepannings, new ſorts of Treaſon deviſed, and the Laws (made for the Peoples Security) turn'd into Snares and Gins to catch and deſtroy the Brave and the Virtuous, and all ſuch as are like to reſent or ſtem the Inundation of Villany ready to overflow the Land. Other Writers (ſays he) ingentia bella, expugnationes Urbium, fuſos captoſque Reges, aut ſi quando ad interna præverterant, diſcordias Conſulum adverſus Tribunos, agrarias frumentariaſque Leges, plebis & optimatum certamina libero egreſſu memorabant, which may thus be engliſhed; They had to write of great Wars, the ſtorming of Towns, Kings put to the rout, and taken Captive; or (if they looked Homeward) with a free Hand they deſcribed the Claſhings of the Chief Magiſtrate with the Peoples Repreſentative, the Great Charter, the fundamental Laws and Liberty of the Subject, with the warm Debates and Conteſtation betwixt the Peers and the Commons; theſe were what Tacitus accounted the nobleſt Matter for an Hiſtorian. Tac. Hiſt. lib. 4.

with Plutarch, Dion Caſſius, Ammianus, Lucan, &c. may obſerve: So that he compoſed his Commentaries with great Elegancy of Stile, but not with much Reputation to his Integrity.

The Author of theſe Memorials had not the ſame Temptations to prevaricate, nor can well be ſuſpected of a Deſign to repreſent things otherwiſe than faithfully to himſelf. It is not the Stile and Delicacies of Language that a wiſe Reader expects in Writings of this kind; it is the Heart he ſeeks here, and not the Countenance.

Here is no Preface or Inſinuation of Indifferency and Impartiality. Our Author confeſſes every where his Engagements, his Party, when he proceeded and when he retreated, without caſting any Miſt to lead you aſide, or divert you (where the Ways are nice and difficult) from obſerving what were the Meaſures, and where the Danger of making a falſe Step. All are naked here, and the Party more likely to ſuffer by the Truth, than the Truth to have any Violence in favour of a Party.

Hence it is that here we meet with many Secrets that never otherwiſe could have come to light, or would not have come without ſome Preparation and Adjuſtment. And we find what were the Perplexities, and what the Thoughts of the principal Actors in the critical Junctures and Times of extremeſt Difficulty, and how they ſteer'd in thoſe black tempeſtuous Seas, where no Chart or Compaſs could direct them.

We are told every where what the Intelligence, and whence it comes, without reflecting on Perſons; and find always in him that Principle of a Gentleman, not to report diſhonourably of an Enemy: And therefore is he the more excuſable in giving a fair Character of his Friends.

Livy every where made honourable Mention of Scipio, Afranius, and even of Brutus and Caſſius, often ſtiling them excellent Perſons; yet was he not the leſs beloved of Auguſtus Cæſar, nor had from him other Reprimand than to be called Pompeianus: Nor did thoſe times ever call them Rogues and Regicides, Terms that afterwards a more degenerate Un-Roman Generation, under the Miniſtry of Sejanus, beſtowed upon them.

Tac. Hiſt. lib. 4.

Lucian makes ſhort with a certain Dealer in Hiſtory, who gave the Captain of his own Party the Name of Achilles, and always called the Enemy's General Therſites. There are ſome Sort of Writings devoted to the Paſſions, and lower Agitations of the Soul, to ſtir Anger and whet up a ruſting Animoſity: But (of all others) it worſt becomes an Hiſtorian to be dipt in any Drudgery of that Nature. It is an Affront to a civil Reader who comes with a good Appetite, hungry for the Truth, to grate upon his Teeth with Reproaches and Aggravations; or on the other hand, to turn his Stomach with nauſeous Flouriſhes, and ſlaviſh Adulation. The Reader comes not to engage or liſt himſelf on a Party, but expects with an honeſt Neutrality to make Profit and a laudable Spoil from the Quarrels and Miſcarriages of others; and without declaring either for Guelph or Gibellin, comes to reap the true Fruit of all the Toil and Dangers that both have undergone; he is to fill his Head with Wiſdom, and ſeeks not the ſuperficial Ornament of fading Laurels; he ſtudies not to be angry, but to find Wit to his Anger.

engage

Our Author was too much in the World, and too much a Philoſopher for any ſuch Malignity to infect his Pen, nor was it in his Temper. And certainly no Man was ever better furniſh'd, or more capable of compoſing an Hiſtory of theſe Times worthy the Majeſty of the Engliſh Name, had he taken upon him that Province.

Some have an Opinion that it muſt be ſome General, or ſome Ambaſſador, or ſome prime Miniſter only, that can be ſufficient for a Work of this Nature. But what can an Ambaſſador perform beyond his own Circle and Negotiation? Even Secretaries of State, we know, are not always of the Cabal, nor their Intelligence the moſt infallible.

Nor is it to be thought that Hannibal, bred in the Camp, for all his Diſcipline, and his Skill in marſhalling an Army, could vie with Livy in managing a Pen, in chooſing his Words, or diſpoſing them in Order; nor could expreſs that Vigour of Stile, that Addreſs of Speech and Elocution; all which are clear another ſort of Talent.

Yet our Author not only ſerved the State in ſeveral Stations, and Places of the higheſt Truſt and Importance both at home and in foreign Countries, and acquitted himſelf with Succeſs and Reputation anſwerable to each reſpective great Character; but likewiſe converſed with Books, and made himſelf a large Proviſion from his Studies and Contemplation, like that noble Roman Portius Cato, as deſcribed by Nepos; he was Reipublicæ peritus, & Juriſconſultus, & magnus Imperator, & probabilis Orator, & cupidiſſimus literarum. Corn. Nep. A Stateſman, and learned in the Laws, a great Commander, an eminent Speaker (in Parliament) and an exquiſite Scholar. He was all along ſo much in Buſineſs, one would not imagine he ever had leiſure for Books; yet who conſiders his Studies, might believe he had been always ſhut up with his Friend Selden, and the duſt of Action never fallen on his Gown. His Relation to the Publick was ſuch throughout all the Revolutions, that few Myſteries of State could be to him any Secret. Nor was the Felicity of his Pen leſs conſiderable than his Knowledge of Affairs, or did leſs Service to the Cauſe he eſpouſed. So we find the Words apt and proper for the Occaſion, the Stile clear, eaſy, and without the leaſt Force or Affectation of any kind, as is ſhewn in his Speeches, his Narratives, his Deſcriptions, and in every Place where the Subject deſerves the leaſt Care or Conſideration.

In all Occurrences, in all the Meſſages, Letters, Remonſtrances, Petitions, Repreſentations, Addreſſes, Votes, Conferences, Orders, Informations, Proclamations, Declarations and Propoſals, he delivers them in their immediate Words, in their own Cant and Dialect, the more lively to expreſs the particular Genius, and that Air of Religion which in thoſe Times overſpread the face of Affairs.

The daily Paſſages and Matters of Fact thus ſimple and unadorned, without being pinn'd together, and lickt over to Advantage for publick View, may have as good effect, may be as profitable, and be as well received by Men of Judgment, as any Story dreſt up with Gloſs and Artifice, and all the Starch and Formality that ordinarily recommend them to the World.

In Matters of Hiſtory none amongſt the Moderns ever merited better than Thuanus, yet 'tis obſerved, without any Diminution to him, that his poſthumous Work contains multa falſiſſima & indigna, many things moſt falſe, and unworthy ſo great a Name. If ought of that Nature happen amongſt the infinite Particulars wherewith this Volume is charged, it muſt be noted without any Imputation either to the Intelligence, or to the Integrity of our Author, this being a poſthumous Work, and as has been ſaid, never by him intended for the Publick.

OF THE

ENGLISH AFFAIRS,

During the REIGN of

KING CHARLES the Firſt.

Mar. 27. KING Charles the Firſt ſucceeded his Father King James: Immediately after whoſe death the Privy Council met, and drew up the Form of a Proclamation, to proclaim King Charles; which was forthwith publiſhed at Theobalds, where

K. Charles Proclaimed. the King died, and in London by the Nobility, Privy Councellors, Gentry, Lord Mayor and Aldermen, in great Solemnity; and ſo it was in all Places with great Acclamations, and Teſtimonies of Joy from all ſorts of People.

By advice of the Council, a Commiſſion was granted to authorize the Great Seal, Privy Seal, and Signet, till new ones could be prepared; And Commiſſions for authorizing of Judges, Juſtices of Peace, Sheriffs, and all other Officers for Government, with a Proclamation for that purpoſe, becauſe their Powers ceaſed by the King's death: And the like was for Scotland and Ireland.

King James's Body was buried with due Solemnity at Weſtminſter, his Son King Charles (though not uſual) was preſent at the Funerals.

Bucks his Favourite. The Duke of Buckingham was received by the King into an admired Intimacy and Dearneſs.

General Muſters are in all Counties, and 12000 Soldiers levied, Coat and Conduct Money ordered to be diſburſed by the Country, and they to be paid again out of the Exchequer; theſe were for the Palatinate, and a Commiſſion granted for Martial Law, to keep the Soldiers in the better Diſcipline.

Theſe Points of Coat and Conduct Money, and Martial Law, occaſion'd frequent and great Debates amongſt the Judges, and other learned Men.

The King's Marriage. The Eſpouſals of our King with the King of France's Siſter, were made in Paris by Cardinal Richelieu, and with the higheſt State, Feaſting and Bravery that could be.

Buckingham was ſent into France, to conduct the Queen hither. A Navy Royal ſent to Bullen to waft her over Sea; ſhe arrives at Dover, where the King met her. And with great expreſſions of affection and rejoicing by himſelf and all his Subjects, ſhe is received, and ſafely came to London. Some extraordinary Ceremonies and Solemnities were omitted, by reaſon of the Plague then increaſing.

All the Judges were ſent for by the Lord Keeper Williams, who told them, That the King deſired to change his Stile, and to uſe the Stile of King of Great Britain, as well in all Legal Acts and Proceedings, as in Acts of State, and other indifferent Acts. And he prayed the Judges to conſider of it, and to certify him how it might be done. They all met, conſulted and agreed, that it could not be done, which they certified the Keeper; and that all the Judges of England being ask'd their Opinions concerning this Point, in the firſt Parliament of King James, they anſwered una voce, that it could not be done, and Lords and Commons were likewiſe of the ſame judgment. Deſires to change his Stile.

The Parliament met at Weſtminſter; the King made a Speech to them touching the War of the Palatinate, wherein the laſt Parliament had engaged his Father, and which was of neceſſity to be proſecuted and ſupplied; and he urged his great wants and charges: And then the Lord Keeper enlarged upon the ſame. June 18. A Parliament. The King's Speech.

The Commons preſſed upon the Grievances not redreſſed, and to have an account of the laſt Subſidies; others were for Execution of the Laws againſt Papiſts, and the queſtioning Mr. Montague for his Book, Appello Cæſarem, contrived to put a Jealouſy between the King and his Subjects, and to encourage Popery. The Commons preſs for Redreſs of Grievances.

Others praiſed the King and ſaid, That no Grievances had been yet in his Reign; and they were only for a Petition for Religion, and that Religion and Subſidies might go hand in hand together.

After a Faſt, both Houſes petitioned the King concerning Religion, and againſt Recuſants; which was anſwered hopefully: Mountague was brought to the Bar of the Houſe of Commons for his Book, the Arminian Party take in with him. The Houſe voted his Book contrary to the Articles of Religion, tending to the Diſhonour of the King and Diſturbance of the Church and State.

The King owned Mountague as his Chaplain.

The Commons not pleaſed therewith, yet voted, to give the King two Subſidies, for which the King thanks them by a Meſſage; and yet informs them, that the Neceſſities of the preſent Affairs were not Anno 1625. therein ſatisfied, but requires their farther Counſels, and now he ſent a full Anſwer to the Petition of Religion.

By reaſon of the Plague increaſing, the Parliament was adjourned to Oxford. The Vantguard, and ſeven other Engliſh Ships were lent to the King of France, and employed againſt Rochel; the Mariners refuſed the Service. Buckingham was acquainted with it, but not the Body of the Council. The Proteſtants of France ſollicit our King againſt it, but he expreſly commands the Vice-Admiral Pennington to do it, the which he obeyed.

The Parliament re-aſſembled at Oxford, whither this News of the Ships came, and exaſperated many of them, eſpecially againſt the Duke. They inſiſt upon the Grievances. Mountague is ſummoned, his Cauſe, by ſome of the Biſhops, is recommended to the Duke; and they ſay, That if the Church be once brought down below herſelf, even Majeſty it ſelf will ſoon be impeached; and they ſay, that King James approved Mountague's Opinions: But others differed from them.

The King again ſpeaks to the two Houſes of Parliament touching the War in which they engaged his Father for the Palatinate, and the Breach with Spain; then by his command the Lord Conway, and Sir John Cooke, declar'd to the Houſes more particularly the preſent ſtate of Affairs in Germany, France, the Low-Countries, Sweden, and other Kingdoms; they computed the charge of the War to 700000*l.* a Year, beſides the Navy, and Ireland.

Yet the Commons were unſatisfied, ſome ſaid, That things were improvidently managed, and by contrary Deſigns; that it was not uſual to give Subſidies upon Subſidies, in one Parliament, and no Grievances redreſſed; that great Sums of Money were given for places; that the time of the Year was too far ſpent for the Navy to go forth; that it ſhould be enquired whether the Duke brake not the Match with Spain, out of Spleen to Olivarez; and whether he made not the Match with France upon harder terms.

To theſe, and many other things of the like nature, the Duke made a handſome and plauſible Anſwer to both Houſes, and gave them account of the Fleet; much variety of Opinion was in the Houſe of Commons in debate hereof. The King ſends a Meſſage to quicken them. They anſwer him with a general Declaration. And the King perceiving the Commons reſolved againſt Supply without redreſs of Grievances, this Parliament by Commiſſion was diſſolved.

The Parliament diſſolved.

The King followed his deſign of the War, and to put the Fleet to Sea; and made a League with the United Provinces againſt the Emperor, and King of Spain. Then iſſues a Proclamation to recall Recuſants Children from beyond Sea, and againſt Popiſh Prieſts, and to command all Engliſh in the Service of the Emperor, King of Spain, and Archdutcheſs, to return to England. The King ſends out his Letters to the Lord Lieutenants of Counties, touching a general Loan of Money to him, and Warrants are iſſued forth to diſarm Recuſants.

Proclamation againſt Papiſts.

A General Loan.

The Fleet being ready with ten Regiments, the Lord Wimbleton was made Commander in chief; great muttering was, that this deſign was not known to the Council, but to the Duke only, and that he went not in Perſon.

The Engliſh and Dutch Ships deſigned to block up Dunkirk, were diſperſed by Storm, and 22 Dunkirk Men of War, with Land Forces, gave an Alarum to England and Ireland.

The Fleet came together again, and neglected, or prepoſterouſly attempted a great Booty of Spaniſh Ships in Cadiz Bay; then the Army landed, and took a Fort, but the Engliſh finding ſtore of Spaniſh Wines, abuſed themſelves, and hazarded the Ruin of all. 1 Car. The Fleet's ill Succeſs.

They were again ſhipt, and the General put to Sea to wait for the Plate Fleet; but the ill condition of his Men, by a general Contagion, enforced his return home, without any honourable performance, which cauſed great Clamour; but where the fault lay, hath not yet been determined, nor any puniſh'd for it.

The General was accuſed by ſome of his Colonels and Seamen, and examined before the Council; he laid the blame on ſome who did not fight the Spaniſh Ships as he ordered them, they denied that they had Orders to fight. This ſending and proving little ſalved the Honour of the Nation. All Trade with Spain is prohibited, upon Confiſcation; all the Trained Bands are exerciſed.

The Plague ſtill raged in London, ſo that in one Week there died 5000 Perſons; it was alſo ſpread in many Places in the Country. In ſome Families, both Maſter and Miſtreſs, Children and Servants, were all ſwept away. For fear of Infection, many Perſons who were to pay Money, did firſt put it into a Tub of Water, and then it was taken forth by the Party that was to receive it. When the Plague was ſomewhat aſſuaged, and there died in London but 2500 in a Week, it fell to Judge Whitlocke's turn to go to Weſtminſter-Hall to adjourn Michaelmas Term, from thence to Reading; and accordingly he went from his Houſe in Buckinghamſhire, to Horton near Colebrooke, and the next Morning early to Hyde-Park Corner, where he and his Retinue dined on the Ground, with ſuch Meat and Drink as they brought in the Coach with them, and afterwards he drove faſt through the Streets, which were empty of People, and overgrown with Graſs, to Weſtminſter-Hall: where the Officers were ready, and the Judge and his Company went ſtraight to the King's Bench, adjourned the Court, returned to his Coach, and drove away preſently out of Town. The Plague rages in London. The Term adjourned to Reading.

Sir Edward Coke, and other Gentlemen, who had appeared the laſt Parliament againſt the Duke, were made Sheriffs, and ſo could not be choſen Parliament Men. Coke excepted againſt ſeveral parts of the Sheriffs Oath, and by advice of all the Judges, one of his Objections was allowed, to wit, the Clauſe, To deſtroy Lollards; which, by order of the King and Council, was left out of the Oath, and ſo continues. Coke.

The carriage of the Biſhop of Lincoln towards the Duke at the Parliament at Oxford, was remembred; and he was ſequeſtred from the King's Preſence, and from the Council, and from the Cuſtody of the Seal, which was given to Sir Thomas Coventry, and he was ſworn a Privy Councellor, and Lord Keeper.

The King finding the diſcontents of his Subjects increaſed, thought fit to call another Parliament; and firſt, Commands are given to the Biſhops, to proceed againſt the Papiſts, by Excommunication; and a Proclamation confines them. Another Parliament to meet, Feb. 6.

The King determines to leave Mountague to the Parliament, to the great regret of Biſhop Laud.

The Coronation of the King is appointed on Chriſtmas Day, and Commiſſioners made to receive and determine Claims concerning Services to be then done. Knights of the Bath are to be made, and a Proclamation iſſues for all that had 40*l. per Annum*, to come in and receive the Order of Knight-hood. The Coronation.

Anno 1625. A Day of Thankſgiving was kept for the ceaſing of the Plague. In London, and the Out-Pariſhes, this Year died 54265 Perſons, whereof of the Plague 35417.

The King's Coronation was performed with the uſual Ceremonies and Solemnities, by Biſhop Laud; only the King's Robe was White Sattin, becauſe (as ſome ſay) Purple could not be then had.

The Biſhop of Lincoln, having received no Writ of Summons to this Parliament, deſired the King, that he might make his Proxy, and beſought him to mitigate the Duke's cauſeleſs anger towards him.

Speeches to the Parliament. The Parliament being met, the Lord Keeper made a Speech to them, Of the Benefit and Conſtitution of Parliaments; and the King's Love of them, and his ſtriving whether he ſhould be Major, or Melior, a greater King, or a better Man; and that the cauſes of calling them, were to make good Laws, and to execute Juſtice.

Then the King approved of the Speaker, who made an Harangue, ſuitable to the Times; Extolling the King, and praiſing Monarchy, Parliaments, Biſhops, Lords, Commons, Laws, Judges, and all that were in Place; and inveighing againſt Popery, and the King of Spain. And concluded with the uſual Prayer, That his Majeſty would allow the Privilege of Parliament, Freedom of Debate, and Acceſs to his Royal Perſon.

The Commons began to fall upon the Publick Grievances; the Miſcarriage of the late Voyage to Cadiz; the Miſ-imployment of the King's Revenue; evil Councils; favouring of Papiſts; the Loans, Taxes, and many other, which they referred to Committees. They likewiſe exhibited Articles againſt Mountague.

The Privy Council required the Biſhop of Durham to apprehend ſuch of his Majeſty's Subjects as ſhould be preſent at Maſs, and to commit them to Priſon: and the King's Attorney ſent Letters to the Judges, to direct their ſtrict Proceedings againſt Recuſants in their Circuits.

The Commons queſtioned the ſeizing of the Ship, The Peter of New Haven, by Sir James Bag; upon which, our Merchants Ships and Goods were ſeized in France; The Duke ſaid, he would juſtify it by the King's order. The Council of War for the Buſineſs of the Palatinate were called into the Houſe of Commons, but made no clear Anſwer.

The King by Meſſage, and the Lords preſs the Commons for Supplies. They proceed as to the Grievances, by the method of Evils and Remedies, and Reſolved, Grievances.

1. That the Diminution of the Kingdom in ſtrength and honour, is an Evil, which we ſuffer under.
2. The Increaſe and countenancing of Papiſts.
3. The not Guarding of the Narrow Seas.
4. Pluralities of Offices in one hand.
5. Sales of Honours, and places of Judicature.
6. Delivery up of Ships to the French.
7. Miſ-imployment of Three Subſidies, and Three Fifteens.

They ordered, That the Duke, on whom theſe Miſdemeanours chiefly reflected, ſhould have Notice of the Intention of the Houſe of Commons, ſuddenly to reſume the Debate of theſe things.

There ſerved in this Parliament in the Houſe of Commons, many Perſons of extraordinary Parts and Abilities, whoſe Names are in the Liſt of thoſe Times.

Mr. Clement Coke in his Speech in the Houſe of Commons concerning Grievances, ſaid, That it were better to die by an Enemy, than to ſuffer at Home. 1 Car.

The Lords ready to comply with the King's Deſires, appointed a Committee to conſider of the Safety and Defence of the Kingdom, and Safeguard of the Seas. The Committee adviſed one Fleet to be preſently ſet out againſt the King of Spain, and another to guard our Coaſts, and Merchants: this was ſent to the Houſe of Commons, but not well reſented by them.

The King's Letter to the Speaker. The King ſent a ſmart Letter to the Speaker, preſſing for preſent Supplies; and promiſing Redreſs of Grievances, preſented in a dutiful and mannerly way; and this was farther urged by Sir Richard Weſton, To know without farther delay of time, What Supply they would give unto the King. And Speeches.

To this the Commons returned a general Anſwer, promiſing a Supply, The King replyed, As to the Clauſe of preſenting Grievances, that they ſhould apply themſelves to redreſs Grievances, not to inquire after them. And ſaid, I will not allow any of my Servants to be queſtioned among you, much leſs ſuch as are of Eminent Place, and near unto me: I ſee you eſpecially aim at the Duke; I wonder who hath ſo altered your Affections towards him.

Then he mentions the Honour that the laſt Parliament of his Father expreſſed to the Duke; and labours to excuſe him; and concludes, I would you would haſten for my Supply, or elſe it will be worſe for your ſelves; for if any Evil happen, I think I ſhall be the laſt that ſhall feel it.

This was ſuſpected to be the Advice of the Popiſh Councellors to cauſe a Breach betwixt the King and his Parliament; who thereupon mentioned the Duke as the chief Cauſe of all Publick Miſcarriages: and Dr. Turner a Phyſician, propounded his Queries to that purpoſe.

Upon the Opinions of Sir Thomas Wentworth, Noy, Selden, and others; the Houſe voted, That Common Fame is a good Ground of Proceedings for that Houſe. Common Fame.

The King ſent a Meſſage to the Commons, by Sir Richard Weſton; That he took notice of the Seditious Speech of Mr. Coke, and of Dr. Turner's Articles againſt the Duke of Bucks; but indeed, againſt the Honour and Government of the King, and of his Father. That he cannot ſuffer an inquiry on the meaneſt of his Servants, much leſs againſt one ſo near him; and wonders at the fooliſh impudence of any Man, that can think he ſhould be drawn to offer ſuch a Sacrifice, much unworthy the Greatneſs of a King, and Maſter of ſuch a Servant. He deſireth the Juſtice of the Houſe againſt the Delinquents; That he be not conſtrained to uſe his Regal Power and Authority to right himſelf againſt theſe two Perſons.

Dr. Turner explained himſelf, and ſaid, That to accuſe upon Common Fame, was warranted by the Imperial Laws, and by the Canons of the Church; That this Houſe, in the time of Henry the Sixth, did upon Common Fame accuſe the Duke of Suffolk: And that Sir Richard Weſton himſelf did preſent the Common Undertakers upon particular Fame.

The next Day, Dr. Turner wrote a Letter to the Speaker, to excuſe his not attending the Houſe, by reaſon of Sickneſs, and ſubmitting to their Judgments, but not acknowledging any fault.

Sir John Elliot made a bold and ſharp Speech againſt the Duke, and preſent Grievances; yet in the midſt of thoſe Agitations, The Commons remembred the King's Neceſſities, and voted to grant Three Subſidies and Three Fifteens.

Upon a Meſſage from the King, both Houſes attended him at Whitehall, where he gave the Lords

Anno 1625. thanks and ſhewed the Commons their Errors and referred particulars to the Lord Keeper, who in a plain Speech aſſured the Commons, That after the great Affairs ſettled, and ſatisfaction to the King's Demands; he would hear and anſwer their juſt Grievances. Tells them, That his Majeſty excepts to the not puniſhing of Coke, and Turner; he praiſeth the Duke, and his Merit from King and Parliament, and declares the King's Pleaſure; that they proceed no farther in the inquiry touching the Duke: And ſaith, That the Supply voted, is not ſuitable to the Engagements; requires a farther Supply, and their Reſolution thereof by a Day, elſe they are not to ſit longer, nor will the King expect a Supply this way.

Then the King ſpake again, and mentioned Mr. Coke, and ſaid, It was better for a King to be invaded, and almoſt deſtroyed, by a Foreign Power, than to be deſpiſed by his own Subjects. And bids them remember, That the Calling, Sitting, and Diſſolving of Parliaments was in his Power.

Being informed, That the Houſe of Commons, ordered their Doors to be ſhut, whilſt they debated hereof, and that they miſunderſtood ſome paſſages in his Speech, and in the Lord Keeper's, The King ordered the Duke at a Conference of both Houſes to explain it.

Which being done, the Duke gave them an Account of the Buſineſs in Spain, and endeavours to vindicate himſelf in that, and all his Negotiations both at home and abroad, ſince his being at Oxford; and that he did nothing in ſingle Councils; excuſeth his not going with the Fleet; his Maſter commanding him into the Low Countries, to treat with the King of Sweden, of Denmark, and the States.

Then, the Lord Conway made a large Vindication of the Duke in the Publick Tranſactions.

The Lords petitioned the King, againſt the Precedency challenged by the Scotch, and Iriſh Nobles; To which the King anſwered, That he would take order therein.

The Lord Conway wrote a Second Letter to the Earl of Briſtol, by the King's command, to know, whether he would chooſe to ſit ſtill, without being queſtioned for any Errors in his Negotiation in Spain, and enjoy the Benefit of the late Pardon, or elſe, would wave the Pardon, and put himſelf upon a Legal Trial. Briſtol in Anſwer, would not wave the Pardon, nor juſtify himſelf againſt the King, and ſo makes a doubtful Anſwer.

Briſtol's Petition. Then he petitions the Lords for his right of Peerage, to have a Writ to attend the Houſe, and that after two Years reſtraint, he may be brought to his Trial in Parliament.

The Lords pray the King, That Briſtol, and other Lords whoſe Writs are ſtopped, may have their Writs; and they had them: and the Duke ſhowed the Lords a Letter, from the King to Briſtol, charging him, That when the King came firſt into Spain, Briſtol adviſed him to change his Religion, and that he prejudiced the Buſineſs of the Palatinate.

Briſtol by Petition to the Lords, acquaints them, That he had received his Writ to attend the Parliament, but withal a Letter miſſive from the Lord Keeper, ſignifying his Majeſty's Pleaſure, that he ſhould forbear coming to the Parliament, which how far it might trench upon the Liberty and Safety of the Peers, was too high a Point for him; but he ſubmits it to the Lords, and prays, that he may anſwer for himſelf, and ſends with his Petition a Copy of the Lord Keeper's Letter, and his Anſwer to it.

Meſſage from the King. Hereupon, the Lord Keeper delivered a Meſſage to the Lords from the King, Accuſing Briſtol of Undutifulneſs, Diſreſpect, and Scandal to the King; and deſires he may be ſent for as a Delinquent; to anſwer his Offences in Spain, and ſince, and for ſcandalizing the Duke. 1 Car.

The Martial of Middleſex by Petition ſhowed to the Commons, That he by Warrant ſearched in the Clink Priſon, and was reſiſted; but found there four Prieſts, and their Altars, Crucifixes, Books, Papers, &c. That the Prieſts giving notice hereof to the Archbiſhop, before they had done; a Warrant came from the Archbiſhop and Mr. Attorney, that they ſhould not ſearch any farther, nor remove any thing from thence: The Archbiſhop ſaid, That the ſearching for thoſe Prieſts, was a Deſign of the Jeſuits to take the Prieſts, and ſend them to Rome to be put to Death, for Writing in Defence of the Oath of Allegiance.

The Commons cauſed every Member of their Houſe, in his Place to make a particular Proteſtation, Whether they heard Mr. Coke ſpeak the Words charged upon him or not? And every one denied the hearing of thoſe Words ſpoken by Mr. Coke.

After which, the Commons preſented a Remonſtrance to the King, in Anſwer to his, and the Lord Keeper's Speech; denying the Words to be ſpoken by Mr. Coke; and excuſing Dr. Turner, and avowing their Proceedings againſt the Duke, or any other Subject, and pray the King not to give Ear to Officious Reports of private Perſons for their own Ends.

The King chargeth the Biſhops in the Caſe of the Duke and Briſtol, to follow only Proofs and not Rumours.

The Commons ſent to the Duke, That they were paſſing of Articles againſt him; to which he might anſwer, if he pleaſed: but he acquainting the Lords therewith; they would not permit it.

Briſtol was brought to the Bar, by the Lords Order, and Articles exhibited againſt him of High Treaſon, and other Crimes; in the Name of the Attorney General.

I. That he Traiterouſly aſſured King James, That the Emperor and King of Spain would reſtore the Palatinate, and that the King of Spain would conſent to the Match with our Prince; which they never intended: and that was known to Briſtol, who delayed the Treaty. Articles exhibited by the Commons againſt Briſtol.

II. He did not execute the Commands of the King, nor put the King of Spain to a punctual Anſwer, to the detriment of our King and his Allies.

III. That he perſuaded King James not to break with Spain.

IV. That he ſaid, he cared not what the Succeſs of the Treaty would be, but he would make his Fortune thereby.

V. That he intended to introduce Popery here, and perſuaded King James to grant a Toleration thereof.

VI. That he occaſioned the Prince's Journey into Spain to his great Hazard.

VII. That in Spain he perſuaded the Prince to change his Religion.

VIII.

Anno 1626.

VIII. To the ſame purpoſe.

IX. That he perſuaded, that the Prince Elector's eldeſt Son ſhould be bred up in the Emperor's Court.

X. That he would have diſpatched the Deſponſaries, notwithſtanding the Prince's Commands to the contrary, if extraordinary Diligence had not prevented it.

After this, Briſtol preſented Articles againſt the Duke, which were received; and Mr. Attorney being asked by the Earl for a Relator, ſaid, That the King had commanded it. Briſtol replyed, That he would not contend with his Sovereign, but that it might be of dangerous Conſequence, If the King ſhould be Accuſer, Judge, Witneſs, and have the Confiſcation. He deſires, that the Lord Conway might not meddle, and that he might have the uſe of certain Papers; which was granted him.

After which, he proceeded to a large Declaration of the whole Buſineſs between the Duke and him, and laid it home upon the Duke, with an Implication, that ſhortly after the probability of his being reſtored to King James his Favour, the King ſickned and died, having ſuffered much; and to his dying Day, reputed and ſaid, That Briſtol was an honeſt man.

Then he ſet forth the buſineſs of his Writ, and the Prohibition of him to ſit: and that after he had accuſed the Duke, then Articles of High Treaſon were exhibited againſt him; yet the Duke is in favour and ſits as a Peer, and he is a Priſoner.

Articles by Briſtol againſt the Duke.

The Articles preferred by Briſtol againſt the Duke were;

I. That he plotted with Gondamer to bring the Prince into Spain, to change his Religion.

II. That Porter was ſent into Spain, for this End.

III. That in Spain the Duke abſented from Service in Briſtol's Houſe, and frequented the Popiſh Service, and adored their Sacrament, and conformed to their Rites.

IV. That he procured King James to write a Letter to the Pope for the Diſpenſation, and to ſtile him, Sanctiſſime Pater.

V. That the Pope ſent a Bull to the Duke to encourage him in the perverſion of the Prince.

VI. That by his Behaviour in Spain, he ſo incenſed that King, and his Miniſters, as they would admit of no dealing with him, and that he brake that Match, out of his particular Ends, and Indignation.

VII. That he made uſe of the Prince's Letters to his own Ends, and concealed divers great things from him.

VIII. That as he had abuſed the King, ſo he abuſed both Houſes, by a ſiniſter Relation of thoſe Affairs.

IX. The Scandal of his Perſonal Behaviour in Spain, and procuring favours for unworthy perſons there, for hire of his Luſt. 2 Car.

X. That he hath been the great Cauſe of the Ruin of the Prince Palatine.

XI. That he had wrong'd Briſtol in his Relations to the Parliament, in his Honour and Liberty.

XII. That Briſtol revealed theſe Matters to the late King; who ſaid, he would hear him againſt the Duke; which the Duke heard, and not long after, the King ſickn'd and died.

The Earl alſo exhibited divers Articles againſt the Lord Conway, as the Duke's Creature, and unfit to be one of his Judges; and the particular Injuries he did to Briſtol.

The Lords did not commit the Earl, and ordered the Articles againſt him to be firſt heard: and then his, againſt the Duke; yet ſaving his Teſtimony againſt the Duke.

The King took in highly with the Duke; and would have removed the Earl from the Lords Houſe, into the King's Bench, but the Lords would not permit it.

In this Parliament were ſeveral Reſolutions touching Trials there, which are faithfully collected by Ruſhworth, pag. 271, 272. They ordered, That no Peer ſhould have above two Proxies.

Briſtol delivered in his Anſwer to the Charge againſt him, and made a Speech of Introduction, to clear the Objections of his ill Affection to Religion, and his too much Affection to Spain; and made a ſhort Hiſtory of his Life and Negotiations. Briſtol's Anſwer to the Charge.

With his Anſwer, he produced ſeveral Letters of Thanks for his Care; Firſt, in the buſineſs of the Palatinate, and then anſwers punctually to every Article touching the Match with Spain, and produceth the Declaration for Privilege to the Roman Catholicks, little leſs than a Toleration.

And he laid much Blame on the Adviſers of the Prince's Journey to Spain, and ſets forth his own Care and Induſtry to hinder the Duke's Deſigns then of perſuading the Prince to change his Religion: and that the Duke never perſuaded, or adviſed the Prince to be conſtant in the Proteſtant Profeſſion.

He confeſſeth, that in Diſcourſe he delivered his Opinion for the Match of the Palzgrave's Son with the Emperor's Daughter; ſo that the Son (if he were bred in the Emperor's Court) might have Proteſtant Tutors, and freedom of Religion, for him and his Family.

He juſtifies the Performance of his Inſtructions in every Point; and declares the Advantages of that Match with Spain; He avows his former Petition not to be ſcandalous; That he intends nothing but Honour and Service to the King; and humbly ſubmits all to the Judgment of the Lords.

At a Conference with the Lords, The Commons ſent up an Impeachment againſt the Duke of Bucks, managed by Eight of their Members. Sir Dudley Digges made an eloquent Introduction, comparing England to the World; The Commons to the Earth and Sea; the King to the Sun; The Lords to the Planets; The Clergy to the Fire; The Judges and Magiſtrates to the Air; The Duke of Bucks to a blazing Star. Articles of the Commons againſt the Duke.

The Articles were.

II. His

Anno 1626.

II. His buying the Office of Admiral from the Earl of Nottingham, and procuring the King to give Satisfaction to the Earl for it.

III. The like for the Offices of Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Conſtable of Dover.

IV. The neglect of the Duty and Truſt of his Office of Admiral, whereby Pirates infeſted our Coaſts, and Trade decayed.

Theſe were aggravated by Mr. Herbert.

V. Touching the Ship Peter of New Haven, which being brought in, ſome of her Goods and Jewels (to the value of twenty thouſand Pounds) were taken out of her, and delivered to a Servant of the Duke, and after an Order to releaſe the Ship; yet the Duke kept the Goods, and ſtayed the Ship ſtill; and thereupon, our Merchants Goods were ſeized upon in France.

Selden enlarged upon this Article; and the Prejudice of not guarding the Seas, and the King's Right to it.

VII. His procuring the Ship Van-guard, and ſix Merchants Ships to be put into the Hands of the French King, and compelling the Owners to it; which Ships were imployed by the French King.

VIII. That theſe Ships to his Knowledge were to be uſed againſt Rochel.

Theſe Articles were aggravated by Glanvil.

IX. Sale of Honours procured by him, and for his Profit, and the Lord Roberts threatened, if he did not give ten thouſand Pounds to the Duke for his Title; which he did give.

X. He ſold the Office of Treaſurer to the Lord Mancheſter for twenty thouſand Pounds; and the Office of Maſter of the Wards, to Sir Lionel Cranfield for ſix thouſand Pounds.

XI. His procuring Titles of Honour for his Kindred and Allies, and Penſions from the King, to ſupport their Titles.

Theſe were aggravated by Mr. Pym.

Upon this Mr. Sherland enlarged, and computed the Sum of his Gifts to two hundred eighty four thouſand three hundred ninety five Pounds.

XIII. The Plaiſter and Potions which the Duke cauſed to be given to King James in his Sickneſs, a tranſcendent Preſumption of a dangerous Conſequence.

This was aggravated by Mr. Wandsford, and Sir John Elliot made the Epilogue to the Impeachment.

Sir Dudley Diggs, and Sir John Elliot were committed to the Tower; and the King came to the Lord's Houſe, and told them of it. And that he could clear Bucks of every one of the Matters whereof he was accuſed. 2 Car.

D. Diggs and Sir J. Elliot committed to the Tower.

The Commons, by Meſſage to the Lords, deſire the Duke may be committed; and the Duke in the Lord's Houſe deſires that his Trial may be haſtened.

The Commons upon Commitment of their Members, cauſed the Door of the Houſe to be ſhut, and would not proceed in any other Buſineſs, till they were righted in their Liberties.

Whereupon, Sir Dudley Carleton in a Speech told them, That in other Countries, particularly in France, they had formerly Parliaments, as we have, but when their Parliamentary Liberty was turned into tumultuary Licence, and their Kings found how thoſe Councils endeavoured to curb them; They took away, and aboliſhed thoſe Parliaments; and now the common People wanting good Food, looked more like Ghoſts than Men, and went in Canvas Clothes, and Wooden Shoes.

At theſe Words, the Houſe cried out, To the Bar, to the Bar; and his Friends, and Explanations had much a-do to keep him from being brought upon his Knees to the Bar for his Speech.

But he went on, and told the Houſe, That Sir Dudley Diggs, in his Prologue to the Duke's Impeachment, ſpeaking of the Plaiſter applied to King James, ſaid, That he did forbear to ſpeak farther, in regard of the Kings honour; which his Majeſty conceives, to be, to his diſhonour; and that Sir John Elliot was ſo uncivil, and bitter againſt the Duke, in his Epilogue, That the King thought fit to commit them both.

Hereupon, every Member of the Houſe, made ſeverally, a Proteſtation, That he did not give any conſent, that Sir Dudley Diggs ſhould ſpeak the Words charged upon him. Sir Dudley Diggs being releaſed out of Priſon, proteſted, that he never ſpake thoſe Words, and the King was ſatisfied that he did not; but the Duke moved, That every Lord might produce his Notes at the Conference, and at length thirty ſix of the Lords made a voluntary Proteſtation, That they did not hear Sir Dudley Diggs ſpeak thoſe Words at the Conference.

Not long after, Sir John Elliot was releaſed, who excuſed and juſtified the paſſages of his Speech, objected againſt him, and by Vote the Houſe juſtified him, and Sir Dudley Diggs, and all the reſt of the Managers of the Impeachment.

The Lords were diſcontented at the Commitment of the Earl of Arundel, about his Son's Marriage with the Duke of Lenox his Siſter; and with Breaches of their Privileges, and upon the Releaſe of Sir Dudley Diggs, and Sir John Elliot; The Lords petitioned the King for the Earl of Arundel's Releaſe; The King ſent a Meſſage That he was committed for Perſonal Miſdemeanours againſt the King, and not for any Matters of Parliament.

The Lords Petition for Arundel's Releaſe.

The Earl of Arundel had five Proxies, which were loſt by his Impriſonment, and no Preſident was found of any Peer committed ſitting the Parliament, except that of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, in Edward the Third's time,

The Houſe of Lords voted (Nemine contradicente) That no Lord ought to be committed ſitting the

Anno 1626. the Parliament, but by Judgment of the Parliament, except for Treaſon, Felony, or Breach of the Peace. And in Purſuance thereof, they voted a Remonſtrance to the King, to declare their Right, and to pray his Majeſty to releaſe the Earl of Arundel: which was preſented, but no Anſwer being given to it, the Lords preſented another Petition to the King, for an Anſwer to their former Petition; to which the King returned his diſlike.

The Exception taken by the King was at the Words (to have a preſent Anſwer,) whereupon the Word (preſent) was left out in a new Petition; which pleaſed the King, who ſent for the Lords to Whitehall, and courted them, but thinks they miſtruſt him; and ſhews the difference of the Cauſe of Commitment of the Members of the Houſe of Commons, and the Earl of Arundel; and ſaith, He hath juſt cauſe of detaining the Earl of Arundel in Priſon, which he will acquaint them with as ſoon as poſſibly he can.

The Lords preſent a new Petition to the King, That he would be pleaſed to releaſe the Earl, or to declare the cauſe of detaining him in Priſon; That it was contrary to their Privilege. To which the King anſwered, That he would give them ſatisfaction before the end of this Seſſion. The Houſe adjourned till the next day, and after that, for a week, and then at their Meeting the King ſignified to them, That he would within a fortnight, either releaſe the Earl, or ſhew the Cauſe. And at the new meeting of the Lords, the King took off the Reſtraint of the Earl of Arundel.

At this time Cambridge choſe the Duke of Bucks for their Chancellor, to pleaſe the King, and ſhew their diſlike to the Commons. The Earl of Berks Name was in competition, but he had too much Courtſhip and too little Spirit to conteſt, and ſo he deſiſted.

The Houſe of Commons would have interpoſed by their Letter againſt the Duke's Choice; but the King forbad it, challenging thoſe Matters to belong to him, and juſtified the Duke to the Houſe, and by Letter to Cambridge approved their Choice of the Duke.

The Duke with an ingenious Speech uſhered in his Anſwer to the Impeachment of the Commons, whom he courted, yet juſtified himſelf; and ſaid, That his Accuſer, Common Fame, was too ſubtle a Body for him to conteſt with; and he doubted not but in time it would be found, that Common Fame had abuſed both them and him.

His Anſwer to the ſeveral Thirteen Articles againſt him, was diſtinct, and in moſt of them, carried a fair colour, and the chief ſtrength of his Anſwer, was upon the Knowledge of the King, and his Father, and their direction of the particular Paſſages; with his obedience thereunto, and following the Advice of the Council.

He denies having the twenty thouſand Pounds of the Earl of Mancheſter; or ſix thouſand Pounds of the Earl of Middleſex, or the ten thouſand Pounds of the Eaſt-India Company; but ſaith, the King had thoſe Sums; and the Earl of Mancheſter had Satisfaction by the King's Lands, for the twenty thouſand Pounds, and the ſix thouſand Pounds was given by the King to Sir Henry Mildmay.

He abſolutely denies that he applied the Plaiſter, or gave the Drink to King James in his ſickneſs; but the King knowing that the Duke had been cured of an Ague by a Plaiſter and a Drink, the King would have them and took them, ſome of his Phyſicians then being preſent, and allowing them, and taſting the Drink: He concludes, with praying the Benefit of the General Pardon of King James, and this King's Coronation Pardon to be allowed him. 2 Car.

The King ſent to the Commons to quicken them about the Subſidies. They petitioned the King about Recuſants, and named thoſe in Places of Government and Truſt, and pray they may be put out; and by their deſire they attend the King, where by their Speaker and in writing they profeſs their Affection and Loyalty to the King; but they deſire that His Majeſty would not permit the Duke to have any more Acceſs to him.

They agreed upon a Remonſtrance againſt the Duke, and concerning the King's taking of Tunnage and Poundage, though not granted to him by Parliament. And this they did, becauſe they heard that the King intended to diſſolve the Parliament, and by Petition they prayed him not to diſſolve it: but the King would not receive the Petition; but ſaid, He was reſolved to diſſolve the Parliament, and directed a Commiſſion for that purpoſe; and accordingly the Parliament was diſſolved June the fifteenth one thouſand ſix hundred twenty ſix, unhappily.

Thus this great, warm, and ruffling Parliament had its Period.

The Commons diſperſed Copies of their intended Remonſtrance (which is in Ruſhworth's Collections) with the Grounds and Cauſes held forth by the King's Declaration, for diſſolving this, and the former Parliament; and the King publiſhed a Proclamation againſt the Parliament's Remonſtrance, and for the ſuppreſſing of it.

Sir Thomas Chamberlain chief Juſtice of Cheſter died, and Sir John Hobert Baronett, chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, who was a learned Judge, a grave and ſmooth Man.

After the Parliament was diſſolved, the King cauſed an Information to be preferred in the Star-Chamber againſt the Duke of Buckingham for the ſame Matters contained in the Articles of Impeachment in the Parliament againſt him; to which the Duke put in his Anſwer, and Witneſſes were examined, but it came not to hearing.

The privy Council adviſed the King to take Tunnage and Poundage, and an Inſtrument to be paſt under the Great Seal for his taking of it, until it could be paſt by Parliament.

A Commiſſion iſſued to compound with Recuſants.

The King required a Loan of Money, and ſent to London and the Port Towns to furniſh Ships for Guard of the Seas. Noy his Attorney, a great Antiquary, had much to do in this Buſineſs of Ship-money. The deputy Lieutenants, and Juſtices of Dorſetſhire, excuſed themſelves, and ſaid, The Caſe was without Precedent.

London being rated twenty Ships, deſired an Abatement; the Council denied it; and in Anſwer to their Precedents, ſaid, That the Precedents in former times were Obedience and not Direction.

A Benevolence was likewiſe required.

Then a general Faſt was appointed.

Commiſſions iſſued out for Muſters; and Power of Martial Law was given, and the Inhabitants of the Sea Coaſts required to repair to, and dwell upon their Eſtates.

Ships were ſent by our King to the Elbe, which diſcontented the Hamburghers; they were recalled.

The King of Denmark declares to aſſiſt the Elector Palatine againſt the Emperor.

Tilly fights with him, and gives him a Defeat. Our King requires a general Loan, according to the rate of the Subſidy; with Promiſes to repay, and that it ſhall be no Precedent.

To

Anno 1626. To the impoſing of Loans, was added the Billetting of Soldiers; Martial Law was executed, and the Soldiers committed great Outrages.

Sir Randal Crew Chief Juſtice not favouring the Loan was put out of his Place; and Sir Nicholas Hide who drew the Duke's Anſwer in Parliament was preferred to be the Chief Juſtice.

The Biſhop of Lincoln, for ſpeaking Words againſt the Government, and for countenancing Non-Conformiſts, was complained of by Sir John Lamb, and others; and they informed, That Faſts were kept, and Money collected by the Puritans for the Palatines; and that the Biſhop would not proceed againſt them.

The Biſhop got a Copy of the Informations againſt him.

Biſhop Laud was jealous that Lincoln endeavour'd to be reconciled to the Duke.

Six Thouſand Engliſh in Service with the States, were commanded thence under General Morgan, to join with the King of Denmark.

Some who refuſed to lend Money to the King, were forced to ſerve in the King's Ships then going forth; and Refuſers in the Country, were ſome of them committed, and the meaner Sort preſſed to ſerve as Soldiers.

Dr. Sibthorp publiſhed a Sermon, preached by him to promote the King's Affairs; wherein he deliver'd his Opinion, That the King might make Laws; and do whatſoever pleaſeth him. Dr. Mainwaring preached the ſame Divinity; and highly againſt the Power of Parliaments.

The Papiſts were forward in the Loan, and the Puritans were Recuſants in it.

According to the Leave I had from my Father, and by his Means from the ſeveral Judges, I rode all the Circuits of England to acquaint my ſelf with my Native Country, and the memorable Things therein.

About this time the Earl of Denbigh had one hundred Sail of Ships under his command in our Seas, but his Excellency having no Commiſſion to fight, ſuffer'd divers Engliſh Veſſels to be taken away by our Enemies, in his View, without Reſcue by their Countrymen.

Some Ships, taken for Prize, being brought before him as Admiral, it was wondred at that almoſt all of them were by him adjudged to be no Prize, and ſo releaſed; but one Captain, purſued a releaſed Ship, and took her again, brought her to London, and in the Admiralty ſhe was adjudged Prize; and he enjoyed the Benefit, whatever the Earl of Denbigh did before.

Diſtaſtes and Jealouſies were raiſed about the Government of the Queen's Family; wherein the King held himſelf traduced by ſome of her French Servants; who ſaid that the King had nothing to do with them, he being an Heretick.

The Queens French Servants ſent home. The Queen was brought to inſiſt upon it, as part of the Articles, that ſhe ſhould name all her Servants; and ſome unkindneſs aroſe upon it. The King was alſo diſtaſted, that her Prieſts made the Queen to walk to Tyburn on Penance.

Upon theſe Paſſages, the King diſmiſt, and ſent back into France all the Queen's French Retinue; acquainting the French King with it, and excuſing it to him; but it was ill reſented in France, and by them held contrary to the Articles of Marriage.

The jarring with France brake out to an open War, which was fomented by an Abbot here, in diſfavour with Cardinal Richlieu, to put an Affront upon the Cardinal; and Mr. Walter Montague endeavoured to further it: and the Pretence was, to aſſiſt thoſe of the Religion in France.

Our King took that Ground, and the Denial of Count Mansfield's Men to land in France, and the Influence of the Councils of the Houſe of Auſtria upon thoſe of France, and the Embargo of our Merchants Ships there, ſufficient Cauſes for a War. 2 Car. A War with France.

The Duke of Bucks is appointed Admiral and General of the Sea and Land Forces, prepared againſt France. And hath Power to make Knights, &c.

He comes before Rochel with one hundred Sail of Ships, and deſires them to join with him in behalf of the Proteſtants in France; but the Rochellers returning Thanks to our King, and to the Duke, anſwered, That they were bound by Union and Oath, not to do any thing without the Conſent of the reſt of the Religion. The Duke of Bucks before Rochel.

The Duke was adviſed to land his Men at the Iſle of Oleron; which was weak and ill provided, and not at the Iſle of Rea, which was ſtrong, and well provided; but he altered his Deſign and ſailed to Rea; and there landed twelve hundred Men, whom the French encountred; but the Engliſh forced their Way, and all the Army was landed in the Iſland.

Yet did they not take their Advantage againſt the French, but ſuffered the Governor to have five days to recover his Loſs, and to get in (as he did) new Forces and Proviſions; in the mean time the Duke publiſhed a Manifeſto of the Cauſes of this War, particularly the King of France his employing our Ships againſt Rochel, contrary to his Promiſe and Agreement.

Refuſers to pay the Loan impriſoned. The Gentlemen here, who refuſed to pay the Loan, were confined into other Counties, and in cloſe Impriſonment, and ſome of them in common Goals; Sir John Elliot, one of them, in a Petition to the King ſets forth the Illegality of the Loan, or of any Tax without Parliament: taking this way to inform the King, what his Council did not; and he alledgeth his Conſcience not to ſubmit to it, and prays his Liberty; but could not obtain it.

Archbiſhop Abbot ſuſpended. Sir Peter Haiman, another Refuſer, was ſent upon an Errand, as far as the Palatinate. The Archbiſhop Abbot was ſuſpended, for refuſing to licenſe Dr. Sibthorp's Book, a Sermon for abſolute Power; and a Commiſſion was granted to ſeveral Biſhops to exerciſe the Archiepiſcopal Juriſdiction.

Habeas Corpus. Five of the impriſon'd Gentlemen, by Habeas Corpus were brought to the King's-Bench; and (by their Counſel aſſigned) took Exceptions to the Return, for that it had not the Cauſe of their Commitment, but of their detainer in Priſon, per ſpeciale Mandatum Regis, which is no particular Cauſe, and the Law being moſt tender of the Subjects Liberty. Noy, Selden, Bramſton, Calthrope, and others who were of Counſel for the Priſoners, prayed they might be releaſed and diſcharged.

Heath, the Kings Attorney, at another Day argued in Maintenance of the Return. Hide chief Juſtice declared the Opinion of the Court, That the Return was Poſitive and Abſolute, by the King's ſpecial Command, and the Signification of it by the Lords of the Council is only to inform the Court. And that the Habeas Corpus is not to return the Cauſe of the Impriſonment, but of the detention in Priſon; that the matter of this Return is ſufficient, and the Court is not to examine the Truth of the Return, but muſt take it as it is. So the Priſoners were remanded: The Report of this Caſe may be found in Ruſhworth's Collections.

Anno 1627. The King reſolves to ſend Supplies to the Iſle of Rea; and Soldiers and Mariners are preſs'd for that purpoſe, but many of them, not liking the Buſineſs, run away from their Conductors; hereupon it was reſolved by all the Judges; That, If one be retained to ſerve the King beyond Seas, and preſs money deliver'd to him, and by Indenture he be deliver'd to a Conductor to lead him to the Port where he is to be ſhipped, and he run away from the Conductor, that this is Felony by the Statutes 7 H. 7. ch. 1. & 3 H. 8. ch. 5.

The Earl of Holland is appointed to carry the Supplies to Rea. The Governor of the Iſland gives notice of his Wants to the French King, and hath Relief ſent him, the French King blocks up Rochel, to be near to Rea, and ſupplies the Fort there. The Rochellers and Rohan declare for the Engliſh.

The Governor of Rea gets Leave of the Duke to ſend to the French King, pretending to ſurrender the Fort, and ſo gains Time; The Duke begins to batter the Citadel, then purpoſeth to go away; then alters his Reſolution, and ſtorms the Fort, but in vain; whereupon he raiſes the Siege, and retreats towards his Ships.

The French purſue, and in a narrow Cawſey, with Salt Pits on each Side, the Duke having made no Works, or Proviſion for his ſafe Retreat, he is attack'd by the French, and, after a valiant Defence, eſpecially by the Engliſh Foot, the French by the Advantage of the Place, gave a great Blow, and ſlew many of the Engliſh, yet the reſt got to their Ships.

The Engliſh beaten at the Iſle of Rea.

The Duke is blam'd for many Neglects, he lays it upon the Council of War, and the Earl of Holland's not coming with Supplies in Time; Holland, and the Council of War excuſe themſelves; The People generally cry out againſt the Duke, and are greatly diſcontented at this unfortunate Action; the Mariners are tumultuous, and many Miſchiefs do ariſe.

The Rochellers ſend to our King for Relief; and pray his Mediation for the Proteſtants, in Caſe a Treaty of Peace be between him and their King. They ſet forth their great Straits and Diſtreſſes, and intreat a general Collection for their Relief.

At this Time a Reſolution is taken to call a Parliament; and in order thereto, the impriſon'd Gentlemen are releaſed, who are in ſeveral Places choſen to be Members of this New Parliament: Directions are given to uſe Moderation in the Buſineſs of the Loan-Money. The Archbiſhop, the Biſhop of Lincoln, and others in diſfavour, have their Writs to ſit in Parliament.

Yet a Commiſſion of Exciſe is granted, and Moneys are disburs'd for the raiſing of German Horſe; the Jeſuits hope well of this intended Parliament.

A Parliament, Mar. 17. The King's Speech. Which being met, The King ſpake to them to Expedite their Buſineſs; acquaints them with the common Danger, moveth for Supplies, and tells them if they do not their Duty, he muſt uſe ſuch other Means, as he may, to prevent Ruin, that he will gladly forget and forgive what is paſt, and hopes they will not follow former Courſes of Diſtraction.

Lord Keeper's Speech. Then the Lord Keeper enlargeth in his Speech, acquaints them with the general Eſtate of Affairs in Chriſtendom, the enemies and dangers to this Kingdom; perſuades to ſupply, and to ſpeed, and aſſures in the King's Name, forgetfulneſs of any former diſtaſtes, and all affections of his Majeſty unto Parliaments.

Grievances. Firſt the Parliament petition for a publick Faſt, then they debate of the Grievances, of billeting of Soldiers, Loans, Benevolences, Privy Seals, Impriſonment of Refuſers, not bailing them upon Habeas Corpus, and they incline to give no Supply, till theſe were redreſſed, and the Point was, whether to begin with Grievances or with Supplies. 2 Car.

The Courtiers were moderate, high Complaints were made of Deputy Lieutenants, compar'd to Janizaries. The Buſineſs of the Habeas Corpus was examin'd; and found that Mr. Attorney had cauſed a Draught of a Judgment to be made, and preſſed to have it entred upon the Record; but the Judges would not permit it to be done. My Father and other Judges of the King's-Bench, ſpake in the Lords Houſe in juſtification of the Proceedings of that Court, in this Caſe.

Reſolutions in Parliament.

1. That no Freeman ought to be impriſoned without cauſe ſhewed, either by the King or Council.

2. That a Habeas Corpus in that Caſe ought to be granted.

3. That if no Cauſe of Commitment be returned, the Party is to be bailed.

March 26. 1628.

3 Car. Then the King's Propoſals were taken into conſideration for Supplies. They had a Conference with the Lords touching Recuſants, and their Hierarchy here ſecretly exerciſed. They agreed upon a Petition to the King; That the Laws againſt Romiſh Prieſts might be executed, That Children may not be tranſported beyond Sea to be bred Papiſts, That Recuſants may be confined according to Law, That they may not be permitted to reſort to Ambaſſadors Houſes to Maſs, That they may not be in Offices, That the Judges be commanded to put the Laws in Execution againſt them, and to give an Account thereof, And that Recuſants Children may be brought up in the Proteſtant Religion. All which the King granted.

Vote. The Commons alſo voted, That no Freeman ought to be confined by the King, Privy Council, or others, but by Act of Parliament, or due Courſe of Law.

And they debated the Point of foreign Employment againſt one's Will.

They had a Meſſage from the King to convince ſome falſe Reports that had been raiſed of what had paſſed at the Council; and that the Duke ſpake nothing againſt the Parliament, but was the firſt Mover for it.

5 Subſidies Voted. Upon a ſecond Meſſage, They unanimouſly vote five Subſidies, with which the King was much pleas'd, and the Duke highly extolled it; whereof Secretary Coke inform'd the Houſe, but Exception was taken, That the Duke's Name was mixed with the King's.

The Subjects Right. The Commons at a Conference acquaint the Lords with their Reſolutions touching the Subjects Liberty, and Right, confirm'd by 7 Acts of Parliament, in point; Magna Charta being one, 12 Preſidents in Terms, and 31 more, and the Reaſon clear'd.

Privilege. The King deſires, That the Commons would make no Receſs at Eaſter. This is excepted to, as againſt their Privilege; who may adjourn when they pleaſe. They reſolve that Grievences and Supply ſhall go hand in hand together.

Meſſage. An unpleaſing Meſſage comes to them from the King, which raiſed Debate, and the Speaker deliver'd to the King a Petition touching Billeting of Soldiers, and an Excuſe touching the King's Supply that they did not delay it. They vindicate their own Proceedings, and pray, not to be miſunderſtood. Petition.

The Matter of Billeting of Soldiers, and the Unlawfulneſs and Miſeries of it, were fully open'd

Anno 1628. in the Petition: And preſent Remedy prayed of that inſupportable Burden.

Acts of State. The Lords and Commons debated the point of Marſhal Law, and touching a Petition of Right, againſt which the King's Serjeant Aſhley argued, that the Propoſal of the Commons tended to Anarchy; and that they muſt allow the King to govern by Acts of State, for which the Lords committed him; and he recanted.

At a free Conference, the Lords and Commons debated of Propoſals to the King, touching the Property and Liberty of the Subject, made by the Lords; with which the Commons were unſatisfied.

The King preſſed for Supplies, and declared that he holds Magna Charta, and the other 6 Statutes to be in Force, and will govern according to Law. And it was advis'd to rely upon the King's Promiſe, but all were not ſatisfy'd to do it; and a Bill was ordered to be drawn concerning the Subſtance of Magna Charta, and the other 6 Statutes.

Royal Word. The King ſends another Meſſage to the Commons to know if they will reſt on His Royal Word, which he will perform. They debate upon it, and ſome ſay his Word is to be taken in a Parliamentary way.

Meſſage. He ſends another Meſſage to haſten them; and that he will end this Seſſion within a Senight. The Commons attend him, and anſwer his Meſſages, give him humble Thanks for them; and deſire that by a Bill they may ſatisfy the People of their Rights; and that they do not intend to incroach upon the King's Prerogative.

Meſſage. The King is contented that a Bill be paſt to confirm Magna Charta, and the other 6 Statutes without Additions. After this by another Meſſage they were preſſed to rely on the King's Word. In the Debate hereof, the Door of the Houſe was ſhut.

Petition of Right. They reſolve upon the Petition of Right, and preſent it to the Lords for their Concurrence; and reſolve the Times of Payment of the 5 Subſidies.

Letter from the King. The Lords at a Conference acquaint the Commons with a Letter from the King to them wherein he much inſiſts upon ſome Caſes of Commitment ſo tranſcendent that they may not be diſcovered; and which are above the Capacity of the Judges; but promiſeth to obſerve the Laws; and agrees Sovereign Power. that Magna Charta and the other 6 Statutes are in force; and deſires Expedition. The Lords propound an Addition or ſaving to the Petition of Right, not to infringe Sovereign Power.

The Commons did not like the Word Sovereign Power, nor any ſaving in the Petition of Right, and gave their Reaſons at a Conference with the Lords, why they could not agree to this ſaving. The Lords were ſatisfy'd, and both Houſes concurred, then the Bill of Subſidies was read and committed.

Dr. Manwaring. A Charge was brought into the Houſe by Mr. Pym againſt Dr. Manwaring, That he by his Divinity endeavoured to deſtroy the King and Kingdom.

The Fleet under the Command of the Earl of Denbigh, ſailed to Rochel, and finding there ſome French Ships, would not aſſault them, though fewer and weaker than themſelves by many Degrees; but after ſhewing themſelves only, they return'd and left Rochel unreliev'd.

The Council here being inform'd thereof, and ſome Parliament-men; Letters were ſent from the Council to the Duke, to order the Earl of Denbigh to go again and to relieve Rochel.

Anſwer to the Petition of Right. Both Houſes preſented to the King the Petition of Right, he promiſeth a gracious Anſwer. The Petition is read, and his Anſwer was, That Right be done according to Law; and the Statutes be put in due Execution. 3 Car.

This Anſwer did not ſatisfy the Commons; and in debate of it, Sir Jo. Elliot fell upon the publick Grievances, and moved that a Remonſtrance of them might be made to the King, but this was by ſome held unſeaſonable, yet it was ſeconded, and a Committee made about it.

Meſſage. The King ſends to the Houſe, that he will not alter his Anſwer, and intends to conclude this Seſſion within a Week. They ſend to the Lords the Charge againſt Manwaring for his Sermons, Manwaring. That the Subjects under pain of Damnation ought to pay the Loan, and obey the King's Will in all things. He is ſentenc'd by Fine and Impriſonment, diſabled to have any Eccleſiaſtical Preferment, and to make a Submiſſion.

Meſſage. The King ſends another Meſſage to the Commons not to entertain any long Buſineſs, for that he will keep his Time of concluding this Seſſion; and that they lay no Aſperſions upon the Government, or Miniſters of State. Hereupon Sir Jo. Elliot beginning to ſpeak, the Speaker fearing that he intended to fall upon the Duke, roſe up and ſaid, there is a Command upon me, that I muſt command you not to proceed in this Matter.

The Commons declare, That no undutiful Speech hath been ſpoken by any Member. Sir Ed. Coke named the Duke to be the cauſe of all their Miſeries, and moves to go to the King, and by word to acquaint him; Selden ſeconds it, and moves for a Declaration againſt the Duke, that Judgment be demanded againſt him, upon his Impeachment in the laſt Parliament.

Meſſage. The King ſends to the Commons to adjourn till the next Day, and they did ſo; but were in much diſturbance, yet upon another Meſſage Meſſage. brought by the Speaker, the former Reſtraint was qualify'd; and the King ſent alſo a courting Meſſage to the Lords.

Petition. Both Houſes agree to petition the King for a ſatisfactory Anſwer to the Petition of Right. The Commons proceed about their Declaration. They examine the Buſineſs about raiſing 1000 German Horſe, under Balfour and Dalbier, and providing Arms for them.

Another Anſwer to the Petition of Right. The King gave another Anſwer to the Petition of Right, ſoit Droit fait comme il eſt deſiré, which ſatisfy'd the Commons and all good Men; and is the ſame in the printed Act, and ſo that excellent Law paſſed. June 7th.

The Commons ſent for the Commiſſion of Exciſe, preſented it to the Lords, and pray'd that it might be damn'd. The Duke is again nam'd in the Houſe to be mention'd in their intended Remonſtrance, as the Cauſe of all their Evils. Sir Hum. May, Sir H. Martyn, Sir Ben. Rudyard and others endeavour'd to moderate the Houſe; but they voted the Duke to be nam'd in their Remonſtrance.

D. Lambe. Dr. Lambe was ſet upon in the Streets by the Rabble, and called Witch, Devil and the Duke's Conjurer, and beaten that he died; the Council wrote to the Lord Mayor to find out, and puniſh the chief Actors therein, but none were found.

Votes againſt Biſhop Neal, and Laud, and the Duke. The Commons voted Biſhop Neal, and Laud, to be nam'd in their Remonſtrance, as ſuſpected to be Arminians, and they nam'd the Duke's Power, and the abuſe of it; and pray'd the King to conſider, whether it were ſafe that ſuch a Perſon ſhould be ſo near him.

Remonſtrance. The Remonſtrance was perfected, and in it Compliments to the King; and the Duty of Parliaments to make known to him publick Grievances, which otherwiſe he could not know, then they mention their Fears of ſome Endeavours to introduce Popery.

They

Anno 1628.

They ſhew the Favourers of Papiſts, and the Favours to them, amounting to a Toleration, or little leſs. The ſpreading the Faction of Arminians, and the Practice of Popery in Ireland, and the religious Houſes there newly founded; the fear of the Change of Government, in the Loans, Billeting of Soldiers, German Horſe, taking of Tunnage and Poundage without Grant by Parliament. The Voyages to Cadiz, Rea, Rochel, want of Powder, yet then the King's Powder ſold, the loſs of Trade, and not guarding the Seas.

The cauſe of all the Evils they conceive to be, the exceſſive Power of the Duke of Bucks, and his Abuſe of that Power; and they ſubmit to the King's Wiſdom whether it be ſafe to continue that Power, or the Duke ſo near the King's Perſon.

They deſire acceſs to the King, and order the Speaker (though unwilling) to deliver the Remonſtrance. The King ſends a Meſſage that he intends ſo end this Seſſion. The Commons proceed in the Bill for Tunnage and Poundage.

Meſſage.

By the King's appointment, an Order is made in the Star-Chamber, to take off from the File, the Bill there againſt the Duke and his Anſwer, the King being ſatisfied of the Duke's Innocency.

The Duke denies the ſpeaking of any Words at his Table, againſt the Commons, as one of their Members reported; and charged one Melvil a Scotchman, for ſaying, That the Duke intended to put the King upon a War againſt the Commonalty, with the Aſſiſtance of Scotland and the like, and that Sir Thomas Overbury had poiſoned Prince Henry by his Inſtigation.

The King cancelled the Commiſſion of Exciſe.

Remonſtrance.

The Commons order a Remonſtrance to be drawn of the Peoples Rights; and of the undue taking of Tunnage and Poundage, without the grant of it by Parliament, which being ready, the Speaker, who was before ſent for to the King, came late, and while the Remonſtrance was in Reading, the King ſent for the Houſe, and ſpake to them touching it, and took offence that it mentioned Tunnage and Poundage taken without Grant by Parliament, as contrary to his Anſwer to the Petition of Right; which he excuſed, and ſaid he could not want Tunnage and Poundage.

Parliament prorogued to Octob. 20.

Then he paſſed the Bill of Subſidies, and other Bills, and the Lord Keeper declared the King's Pleaſure to prorogue the Parliament; which was ſo done, by Proclamation.

Manwaring's Books were ſuppreſs'd by another Proclamation, and Compoſitions for Recuſants Eſtates directed by another; and to ſearch for and commit Popiſh Prieſts by another.

Dr. Montagu was made a Biſhop, and Dr. Manwaring (though diſabled by Sentence) was preferred to a good Living, and both were pardoned.

Towards Chriſtmas I was choſen Maſter of the Revels, and Treaſurer of the Middle-Temple, and during this Chriſtmas an Accident fell out that a young Gentleman, one Mr. Baſing, died; and in regard he was a Gentleman of a good Fortune and an Officer of Quality in this Solemnity, the Parliament ordered their Treaſurer to diſburſe Money out of the publick Stock for his Burial, and to take care that he ſhould be decently and fitly carried to his Grave, and in ſuch manner as was anſwerable to his Quality and the Dignity of his Office, which was done, and thereupon a Letter was ſent to his Father acquainting him with his Son's Death, and the Care and Reſpect of the Parliament to have him buried anſwerable to his Quality and as his Son, and what had been diſburſed about the ſame: And his Father refuſing to pay it, it was agreed that a Bill ſhould be preferr'd in the Court of Requeſts in the Treaſurer's Name againſt Mr. Baſing's Father, ſetting forth the Cuſtoms of the Inns of Court for the Solemnities of Chriſtmas, and the Choice of Chriſtmas Officers, with the whole Matter relating to Mr. Baſing, and to pray that he might be compell'd to repay the Money ſo diſburſed with Damages. The Bill was drawn accordingly, and the Honour, Cuſtoms and Societies of the Inns of Court ingeniouſly and handſomly at large expreſs'd in it. Mr. St. Aſly, St. Hoskins, Mr. Palmer, Mr. Mainard, Mr. Noy and many other conſiderable Perſons, did ſet their Hands to the Bill. Upon my carrying the Bill to Mr. Attorney-General Noy, he was pleaſed to adviſe with me about a Patent, the King commanded him to draw of Aſſociation between England and Scotland concerning the Buſineſs of Fiſhing, upon which he gave me a Fee for it out of his little Purſe, ſaying here take theſe ſingle Pence, which amounted to eleven Groats, and I give you more than an Attorney's Fee, becauſe you will be a better Man than an Attorney-General, and this you will find to be true. After much other Drolling, wherein he delighted and was very good at it, they parted, abundance of Company attending to ſpeak with him all this time. Upon the Bill being preferred the Money was paid, the Treaſurer diſtributed the Money among the poor Priſoners, and not one Peny of it came to the publick Stock, and thus this Buſineſs had a Concluſion, which for the Variety, Humour, and Precedent of it, I thought fit to remember, and it was occaſion of much Diſcourſe at that time. 3. Car.

The chief Baron Walter is put out, and the King ſaid of Judge Whitlocke, that he was a ſtout, wiſe, and a learned Man, and one who knew what belongs to uphold Magiſtrates and Magiſtracy in their Dignity, and there was ſome Speech of making him chief Baron in the room of Walter; but my Father had no great mind to ſucceed Walter; becauſe Walter alledged that his Patent of that Office was quam diu ſe bene geſſerit, and that he ought not to be removed but by a Scire facias.

This Year died Judge Doderidge, a grave and very learned Judge, and an excellent Scholar, Lawyer and Orator: In his Place in the King's-Bench came Sir George Croke, who was before a Judge of the Common-Pleas, a Man full of Piety, Juſtice, Learning in the Law, Courteſy and Hoſpitality.

Rochel being beſieged, the Duke was appointed to go with the Fleet to relieve it, and being for that end at Portſmouth, with much Company, he was ſuddenly ſtabbed to the Heart, by one Lieutenant Felton; and fell down preſently, crying, The Villain hath ſlain me, and ſo died. When ſome that came in ſuſpected Monſieur Soubiſe to have done it; Felton ſtepped forth, and ſaid, I am he that did it, let no innocent Man ſuffer for it, and ſo was apprehended, not offering to eſcape, and was ſent to Priſon. The Duke ſtabbed by Felton.

The King (notwithſtanding) went on with the deſign to relieve Rochel, and the Fleet went thither, but returned without doing any Service, being ill provided, and their Victuals ſtunk. Upon this, the Rochellers were ſo much diſtreſſed, that of 15000 Men but 4000 remained alive; the reſt periſhed with Hunger. The Soldiers that returned, and were billetted up and down, committed great Inſolencies.

Upon the Peace made between England and France, the Proteſtants there for a time, had a little more Indulgence.

Anno 1628. Morgan was ſent with the Lord Vere to Gluckſtadt. The Privy-Council wrote to Dalhier, to diſpoſe of the German Horſe to the King of Sweden, or to the King of Denmark.

After the Duke of Bucks Death, Biſhop Laud had great Favour with the King.

Parliament prorogued to Jan. 20. The meeting of the Parliament was prorogued.

Many in London reſort to Felton, in Priſon, he ſaith he is ſorry for his Fact, but he was induced to it by the Parliament's Remonſtrance. The ſame he ſaid to the Council; and denied that the Puritans, or any other ſet him on, or knew of his Purpoſe.

Biſhop Laud told him, if he would not confeſs, that he muſt go to the Rack, he ſaid, he knew not whom he might accuſe, perhaps Biſhop Laud, or any other in that Torture. The Council, by the King's Directions, ſent to the Judges for their Opinions, whether he might be racked by the Law. They all agreed, that by the Law he might not be put to the Rack.

Merchants impriſon'd for Tunnage and Poundage. Some Merchants were committed for not paying Tunnage and Poundage according to the King's Declaration. Chambers, one of them, brought his Habeas Corpus: and it was returned that he was committed for inſolent Words ſpoken by him at the Council-Table, that the Merchants were ſcrued up in England more than in Turkey, but the words not being in the Return, it was mended, and he was diſcharged by Bail; the Council were offended at it, and rebuked the Judges, but they juſtified what they had done.

Felton. Felton was try'd at the King's-Bench, and had Judgment of Death, he ſhewed Remorſe, and offer'd his Hand to be cut off, which the King deſired might be done; but the Judges ſaid, it could be done by Law, and he was hanged in Chains.

Tunnage and Poundage. Mr. Vaſſal was brought into the Exchequer for not paying Tunnage and Poundage, he pleaded Magna Charta and the Statute de Tallagio non concedendo; and that this Impoſition was not by aſſent in Parliament. The Barons refuſed to hear his Council; gave Judgment againſt him; and impriſoned him.

Chambers having his Goods ſeized, ſued a Replevin; the Barons ſtayed it, and all other Replevins in the like Caſe, by an Injunction to the Sheriffs, and ordered the double value of his Goods to be ſeized, and the like was in the Caſe of Mr. Rolls.

At the Council it was reſolved before hand to juſtify theſe Proceedings, when the Parliament ſhould meet; and if the Parliament did not paſs the Bill for Tunnage and Poundage, then to break it. And thoſe of the Council, that were Members of the Houſe of Commons, were directed what to ſay, if the Houſe ſhould fall upon any of the King's Miniſters.

Jan. 20. The Parliament met, and found the Petition of Right to be printed with ſome Additions; and the Copies firſt printed without the Additions were ſuppreſſed by the King's Order. And they were informed of the ſeizing of the Merchants Goods, particularly of Mr. Rolles, then a Member of Parliament; and that the Cuſtomers ſaid, If all the Parliament were concerned in the Goods they would ſeize them Theſe things were referr'd to a Committee. The King ſent for both Houſes; ſpake to them in juſtification of his taking Tunnage and Poundage, until they ſhould grant it to him; wiſhed them to do it, and not to be jealous of the Actions of one another; He ſends another Meſſage to them to expedite that Bill, they are troubled that it ſhould be impoſed on them, which ſhould firſt move from them. 3. Car.

King's Speech.

Meſſage.

They conſider of the Grievances ſince the laſt Seſſion: Of the increaſe of Arminians and Papiſts. Pym moves to take a Covenant to maintain our Religion and Rights, they proceed touching Religion before Tunnage and Poundage; and touching the late introducing of Ceremonies by Coſins and others, and the late Pardons.

Meſſage for Tunnage and Poundage. Another Meſſage comes for Tunnage and Poundage to be before Religion. The Courtiers ſecond it. Some Biſhops are mentioned for introducing the Ceremonies. A Faſt is petition'd for. The King anſwers, That for our Proteſtant Friends abroad, Fighting would do more good than Faſting; but grants a Faſt now, ſo as it be not too frequent.

The Commons Declaration. The Commons make a Declaration to the King, why they proceed upon Religion before Tunnage and Poundage. Shewing the Danger Religion is in; and the Neceſſity to ſecure it, as the chief matter of all other, and therein they court the King, and pray that their Proceedings may be acceptable.

The King's Anſwer. The King anſwers, That this gives him no Satisfaction, that any Member of their Houſe may bring in any Bill; that he, who calls them, may cauſe a Bill to be brought in to them; and that he will not ſtop his Ear to the Matters of Religion; and preſſeth their Proceedings for Tunnage and Poundage.

Grievances. In their Debate, ſome accepted againſt the King's Declaration, giving countenance to Arminians, and diſcountenancing Puritans. It was moved that the Merchants might have their Goods reſtored, which were ſeized for not paying Tunnage and Poundage; and they ſent to the Barons of the Exchequer, to nullify the Injunction by them granted againſt the Replevin, ſued out by the Merchants. The Barons juſtify the Injunction in the King's Caſe; but the Houſe was not ſatisfied.

They take notice of the Pardons granted to Manwaring, Sibthorp and others; and Mr. Oliver Cromwell inform'd them of the countenancing of Popery by the Biſhop of Winton, and the Book-ſellers Petition ſaith that Books againſt Popery were ſuppreſſed, and Books in favour of Popery were frequently licenſed. The Houſe takes theſe Matters into Conſideration. Secretary Coke tells them, the King's Zeal againſt Popery. Mr. Attorney gives an Account of Proceedings againſt Prieſts, and of the College at Clerkenwell; but to ſome Queſtions of the Houſe he did not anſwer, being as he ſaid, forbidden by the King.

The Cuſtomers queſtion'd for taking the Goods of Parliament-men anſwer, that they conceive no Privilege of Parliament is in this Caſe. This diſtaſted the Houſe, and being in debate of it, the King ſent a Meſſage, That what the Cuſtomers did, was by his order; and that he would not have his particular Intereſt ſevered from that of his Servants, who acted by his Command. Meſſage.

Votes. The Order of the Council for levying of Tunnage and Poundage was read in the Houſe. They voted the ſeizing of Mr. Rolles his Goods to be a Breach of Privilege; a hot Debate is upon it: The Speaker being called upon to put the Queſtion propoſed, ſaid he durſt not, for that the King had commanded the contrary. The Houſe in ſome Diſturbance adjourn to a Day, and then being met again they wiſh the Speaker to put the former Queſtion, but he refuſed; and ſaid, he had a Command to adjourn the Houſe, and endeavouring to go forth off his Chair, ſome Members held him by force in it: others locked the Door of the Houſe, and brought up the Keys to the Table.

Others

Anno 1628.

Proteſtation.

Others read a proteſtation ready drawn, which they voted, and it was, That whoſoever ſhould bring in Innovation of Religion, Popery or Arminianiſm, and any that ſhould adviſe the taking of Tunnage and Poundage not granted by Parliament, or that ſhould pay the ſame, ſhould be accounted Enemies to the Kingdom.

Meſſage.

The King ſent for the Serjeant of the Houſe, but he was detained, the Houſe door being locked, then he ſent the Gentleman Uſher of the Lords Houſe with a Meſſage, but he was denied admittance, till the Votes were read; then in confuſion the Houſe adjourned to a day, and before that day, the King by Proclamation diſſolved the Parliament, and ſhewed his reaſons for it.

Members committed.

Warrants of the Council iſſued for Hollis, Selden, Nobert, Elliot, and other Parliament-men, to appear before them; Hollis, Curriton, Elliot, and Valentine appeared, and refuſing to anſwer out of Parliament, for what was ſaid and done in Parliament, they were committed cloſe priſoners to the Tower; and a Proclamation for apprehending others went out, and ſome of their ſtudies were ſealed up; Theſe warrants were dated 5 March.

Parliament diſſolved.

King's Speech.

On the 10th of March, the day to which the Parliament was Adjourned, the King in the Lords Houſe (they being in their Robes, but the Speaker and Houſe of Commons not called) ſpake to the Lords, courting them, and ſaid it was meerly the ſeditious carriage of ſome Vipers, Members of the lower Houſe, that cauſed the diſſolving of this Parliament: but he commended others of the Commons. Then he bid the Lord Keeper to do his office, who ſaid My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons (though the Houſe of Commons were not called) The King doth diſſolve this Parliament.

The people were diſcontented, Libels were caſt abroad, eſpecially againſt Biſhop Laud, and Weſton the Treaſurer.

The King reſolving to proceed in the Star Chamber againſt the Parliament men who were committed, propounds ſome Queſtions to the Judges.

4 Car.

Anno 1629.

Reſolutions of Judges.

They Reſolved that the Stat. 4 H. 8. ch. 8. was a particular Act, and extended to Strowde only, yet that all Members of Parliament ought to have like freedome of ſpeech. Upon other Queſtions they agreed.

1. That a Subject ought to confeſs any treaſon whereof he is informed, or elſe he is puniſhable, ſo that it doth not concern himſelf.

2. That in this caſe upon examination, to ſay that he was a Member of Parliament, and ſpake thereof in the Houſe, is in the nature of a Plea, and not puniſhable till it be overruled.

3. That a Parliament-man committing an offence againſt the King or Council, not in a Parliamentary way, may after the Parliament ended, be puniſhed, if he be not puniſhed for it in Parliament; but that regularly he cannot be compelled out of Parliament to anſwer things done in Parliament in a Parliamentary Courſe.

4. That if one or more Parliament-men ſhall conſpire to raiſe falſe rumors againſt the Council, or Judges, to make them hated, it is puniſhable in Star Chamber, after the Parliament ended.

5. Queſtion was if a Parliament-man by way of digreſſion ſay that the Council and Judges agreed to trample upon the liberty of the Subject, and the privileges of Parliament, whether he be puniſhable; to this the Judges ſaid They might not anſwer, becauſe it concern'd themſelves. 4 Car.

Another Queſtion was propounded by Mr. Attorney to the Judges, upon the proceedings in Star Chamber ore tenus, againſt the Parliament-men; and the Judges held it the juſter way not to proceed ore tenus.

My Father did often and highly complain againſt this way, of ſending to the Judges for their opinions before-hand; and ſaid that if Biſhop Laud went on in his way, he would kindle a flame in the Nation.

One Huntley, a Parſon in Kent, was required by the Archdeacon of Canterbury, to preach at a Viſitation, he did it not; afterwards the Archbiſhop by his Letters required him to do it, and he did it not; for theſe contempts, being convened before the high Commiſſion Court, he was fined in a great ſum, and committed to priſon, where he lay a long time, and being upon a Habeas corpus brought to the Bar, the cauſe of his commitment was returned, default in his canonical obedience. He was firſt bailed, and afterwards delivered, upon this reaſon, becauſe breach of canonical obedience is an offence puniſhable by the ordinary, by Eccleſiaſtical cenſures; and not by the Commiſſioners Eccleſiaſtical, by Fine and Impriſonment. Habeas corpus.

Strowde, Hollis, Selden, and Valentine were brought to the Bar, by ſeveral Habeas Corpora, and the cauſe of their committment returned, one Warrant from the Council, and another Warrant from the King, for Sedition and Contempts, and whether this was a good Return or not was argued. Habeas corpus.

One Atkinſon ſued a ſervant of the King, and the Lord Chamberlain committed him, becauſe he did it without his leave; and upon his Habeas corpus, Atkinſon was delivered, which the Earl of Montgomery, Lord Chamberlain taking ill, the ſame day that Atkinſon was delivered, he again committed him, in contempt of the Court, and admiration of all wiſe men. Habeas corpus.

Jones, Whitelocke, and Croke (Hyde denying it) gave a Warrant for a new Habeas corpus, but before the return of it, the Lord Chamberlain, upon wiſer thoughts, diſcharged Atkinſon from priſon.

Information in the Star Chamber againſt the Members.

The King's Attorney Heath, a fit Inſtrument for thoſe times, preferred an Information in the Star Chamber againſt Elliot, and the other Parliament-men there named, ſetting forth their miſdemeanours in the late Parliament, and all thoſe proceedings.

He preferred another Information againſt Chambers in the Star Chamber, ſetting forth the King's Gracious Government, the great privileges of the Merchants, and the ſmall duties they paid; then the words ſpoken by Chambers at the Council Table, That Merchants have more encouragement, and are leſs ſcrued up in Turkey than in England. Chambers confeſt the words, but ſaid he ſpake them of the under officers of the Cuſtomes, who had much wronged him; and not reflecting upon the King or Council, or the Government; Yet the Court fined him 2000*l.* and to make a ſubmiſſion; which he refuſed; underwriting that he did abhor and deteſt it as unjuſt and falſe.

The Fine was Eſtreated into the Exchequer, where he pleaded Magna Charta, and other Statutes, againſt the Fine by the King and his Council in the Star Chamber; it not being by Legal Judgment of his Peers, nor ſaving his Merchandiſe.

But the Barons would not ſuffer his Plea to be filed.

Afterwards

Anno 1629. Habeas corpus.

Afterwards he brought his Habeas corpus, but the Judges remanded him; and after 11 years Imprisonment, and long waiting for ſatisfaction for his loſſes, from the long Parliament, he at laſt died in want.

The Judges perplext.

The Judges were ſomewhat perplexed about the Habeas corpus for the Parliament-men, and wrote an humble and ſtout letter to the King, that by their oaths they were to baile the Priſoners; but thought fit, before they did it, or publiſhed their opinions therein, to inform His Majeſty thereof, and humbly to adviſe him (as had been done by his noble progenitors, in like caſe) to ſend a direction to his Juſtices of his Bench, to baile the priſoners.

But the Lord Keeper would not acknowledge to my Father, who was ſent to him from the reſt of his Brethren, about this buſineſs, that he had ſhewed the Judges Letter to the King, but diſſembled the matter; and told him, that he and his Brethren muſt attend the King at Greenwich, at a day appointed by him.

Accordingly, the Judges attended the King, who was not pleaſed with their determination; but commanded them not to deliver any opinion in this caſe without conſulting with the reſt of the Judges; who delayed the buſineſs, and would hear arguments in the caſe, as well as the Judges of the King's Bench had done, and ſo the buſineſs was put off till the end of the Term.

Then the Court of King's Bench, being ready to deliver their opinions, the Priſoners were removed to other priſons, and a Letter came to the Judges from the King that this was done becauſe of their inſolent carriage at the Bar. And ſo they did not appear.

Some Conſtables, and other mean men, committed by the Council, and bringing their Habeas corpora, were removed from Purſevant to Purſevant, and could have no benefit of the Law.

Members taken off.

Some adviſed the King to have no more Parliaments, but to aboliſh them, as Lewis the 11th of France did, and a Pamphlet was divulged to this purpoſe. The King took another courſe to gain Eminent Parliament-men that were againſt him, to become of his party and to doe him ſervice. He took Sir Thomas Wentworth into favour, and his Countryman Sir John Savile; and they were made Privy Counſellors. Sir Dudley Digges was made Maſter of the Rolls: Noy was made the King's Attorney, and Littleton his Sollicitor.

The Judges of the King's Bench were ſent for by the Lord Keeper, to be in London on Michaelmas day; the chief Juſtice Hyde, and my Father were ſent for to the King at Hampton Court, who adviſed with them, about the Impriſoned Parliament-men, and both theſe Judges did what good offices they could, to bring on the King to heal theſe breaches.

The firſt day of Michaelmas Term, Mr. Maſon moved for the Priſoners to have the Reſolution of the Court. All the Judges declared, that they were contented the priſoners ſhould be bailed; but that they muſt alſo find ſureties for their good behaviour.

Good behaviour.

Proceedings againſt Selden, &c.

Selden prayed that his ſureties for his bailment might be taken, and the matter of the good behaviour omitted, as a diſtinct thing; and all the reſt of the priſoners ſtood to the ſame, that Selden moved, but the Court remanded them to the Tower; becauſe they would not find ſureties for their good Behaviour.

It was intimated to them from good hands, that if they would petition the King, they ſhould be diſcharged, and all the trouble ended, but they refuſed to do it, and were detained in priſon. Sir Miles Hobert and ſome other priſoners moved the King's Bench for ſome more freedom in their impriſonment, but then it could not be obtained. 4. Car.

In the ſame Term an Information was exhibited by the King's Attorney againſt Selden, Hollis, and Valentine, in the King's Bench, ſetting forth the ſame Matters in effect as were in the Information in the Star-chamber.

The like was againſt Sir John Elliot, and for the words ſpoken by him in Parliament, That the Council and Judges conſpired to trample under their feet the Liberties of the Subject and the Privileges of Parliament.

This was ſaid to be done by way of Conſpiracy by all the Defendants as to their Actions in Parliament, and that it was done falſo, malitioſe & ſeditioſe; to ſow diſcord between the King and the Great Ones, and People: And he ſaid it to be vi & armis, that they forced the Speaker to keep in his Chair.

The Defendants pleaded to the Juriſdiction of the Court, becauſe the offences are ſaid to be committed in Parliament, and ought not to be puniſhed in this or any other Court, except in Parliament.

The King's Attorney moved the Court to overrule the Plea, though he did not demur to it; but the Court would not, and gave a day to join in Demurrer, and to have the point argued.

Information in the Star Chamber.

The Attorney exhibited an information in the Star-Chamber againſt Mr. Long, for that he contrary to his Oath when he was made Sheriff, and was by his Oath to keep within his County, yet he did come to Parliament, and ſerve as a Member there, and in the time of Parliament reſided out of his County. For this the Court ſentenced him to pay Two thouſand Marks to the King for a Fine, to be impriſoned in the Tower and to make a ſubmiſſion.

Information in the King's Bench.

In Hillary Term the Information in the King's Bench againſt Sir John Elliot, and the reſt, touching the point of the Juriſdiction of the Court, came to be argued. All the Judges ſeverally declared their Opinions, That in this caſe the King's Bench hath Juriſdiction of the Cauſe. And the Defendants were ruled to plead farther, but they would not put in any other Plea. Whereupon Judgment was given againſt them upon a Nihil dicit, that they ſhould be impriſoned, and not delivered till they had given Security for their good behaviour, and made a ſubmiſſion and acknowledgment of their Offences: And they were alſo fined.

Anno 1630. 5. Car.

Prohibitions.

In Eaſter Term, Sir Henry Martyn Dr. of Laws, and Judge of the Admiralty, made a great Complaint to the King againſt the Judges of the King's Bench, for granting Prohibitions againſt that Court; and all the Judges were before the King about it, and they mannerly and ſtoutly juſtified their proceedings in thoſe Caſes to be according to Law, and as their Oaths bound them.

Queen of Bohemia.

Sir Henry Vane was ſent to the Queen of Bohemia about a Marriage for her Son with the Emperor's Daughter, and the Son to be brought up in the Court of the Emperor; to which the Queen would by no means hearken.

A Peace with France.

The Venetians were ſet on to mediate a Peace between England and France, which took effect: and Sir Thomas Edmonds was ſent to take the Ratification thereof, by the King of France, by his Oath, and ſigning of it.

A Book of Sir Robert Dudley's making, being of Projects to increaſe the King's Revenue, and containing in it ſomewhat in prejudice of the proceedings as to the Parliament, was diſperſed by Anno 1630. by the Earls of Bedford and Clare, Sir Robert Cotton, Mr. Selden, and Mr. St. John, for which they were committed to prison; but Sir David Fowlis discovered the Author, and so the matter ended, and the Prisoners were released.

William Earl of Pembroke died suddenly, as was predicted to him by an Astrologer. Upon the 29th of May 1630, the Queen was brought to Bed of a Son, Prince Charles, to the exceeding joy of the Subjects; and the same day a bright Star appeared, shining at Noon-day in the East.

Prince Charles born, May 29.

King of Sweden.

About Midsummer this year, Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden landed in Germany, with about 8000 Men, and as soon as he came on shore, he kneeled down upon the ground, his Officers and Soldiers round about him, and there gave thanks to God for his safe Arrival, and prayed for his blessing upon that Action, he prayed very pathetically in the presence of his Army, and encouraged them by Texts out of holy Scripture, himself being the Preacher; and of this his old Chancellor Oxenstierne informed me who was with him at that time.

The Prince Palatine sent his Plea to the Diet at Leipsick, and Sir Robert Anstrother was sent thither from our King, to negotiate the Palsgrave's Restitution, but he received only a general Answer, That at present the Affairs of the Empire were so pressing, that they could not take into consideration the business of the Palatinate, but that shortly it should be done, and to the satisfaction of the King of Great Britain.

Dr. Leighton a Scotch-man, for his Book Intituled, Sion's Plea, dedicated to the last Parliament, counselling them to kill all the Bishops, by smitting them under the fifth Rib, and railing against the Queen, calling her a Canaanite and Idolatress, had the Sentence of the Star-chamber executed upon him; he was stigmatized, his Ears cut off, and his Nose slit, and imprisonment.

Dr. Leighton stigmatized.

Sir Humphrey May Vice-chamberlain of his Majesty's Houshold, and one of his Privy-Council, died the 10th of June 1630.

Peace with Spain.

The Peace with Spain was concluded in November, and the Articles solemnly signed, and sworn to be observed, upon a Latin Bible brought for that purpose by Bishop Laud.

At this time the Face of War was over most parts of Christendom; in Italy, and France it was begun, and in Spain also; France fuller of fears, and Germany full of the calamities of War, and infested on all sides with potent Enemies.

King of Sweden.

Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, being entred into Germany, carries on his Designs vigorously and successfully; first, he declares the Cause of his Invasion, For succour and relief, and assistance to the Protestant Princes, and the Cause of Religion so much oppressed by the Emperor and the Popish Party.

The Emperor answers the Declaration, and justifies his Proceedings.

It is certain that the King of Sweden had not the least ambition or thought of beginning a War in Germany, wanting Strength and Treasure to carry on so great a Design, and therefore for a long time would not hearken to any Motions or Proposals made to him about that matter, until he was earnestly sollicited and pressed by the Protestant Princes of Germany, to take their Cause and Oppression, and the Cause of all the Protestants in Germany, into his Compassion; and Intreated for the Cause of God and of his People, to assist them for their deliverance from the miserable and unjust oppressions and persecutions under which all the Protestant Party did then groan, by the Emperor's violence and cruelty towards them. And yet it was then after many denials and excuses, and dissatisfaction in himself, as to the lawfulness of his undertaking this action, that at length he was prevailed with, by their Importunities and fair Promises; but more by the sadness of the condition of the poor Protestants in Germany, and the danger to the Protestant Religion there, and in his own, and all other Countries, designed to be rooted out, to pity their Estate, Paries cum proximus ardet, and for defence of the Protestant Religion, to confederate with the Protestant Princes of Germany. 5 Car.

He thereupon made a League with them, and raised an Army, though but a small one, and landed happily, as is before mentioned; and some of the Princes of the League joining with him, they went on prosperously, through the blessing of God going along with them.

The particular proceedings of this great King, Generalissimo of the Protestant Army, are set down in the Histories of that War; therefore I shall not insert them here: But shall only in the general say this, that the relation of those Affairs by our later Chroniclers, is so greatly mistaken (especially in their Censures, not so proper for Historians, nor becoming the Authors, towards so knowing and active Princes Councils, and Commanders, as they are pleased frequently to judge, and to condemn) that they are not to be relied on; for they are much different from the truth of the proceedings of those honourable Actors in that War.

Marquess Hambleton.

The Marquess of Hambleton sent Rea to the King of Sweden, to offer his Assistance, and that he would bring over Forces to him; but some suspected the Marquess to have a deeper design; under this pretence, to begin to raise Forces to back his intended purpose of making himself King of Scotland.

But (the Marquess being full of subtilty, and in great favour with the King) he wiped off all suspicion of himself, goes on with raising of his Army, and conducted it into Germany.

But so little care was taken of provisions and accommodations for his Men, that they were brought into a sick and shatter'd condition; so that they mouldred away in a short time: and the Marquess was forced to return to England, without gaining any great Renown by this action, wherein he neither did Service to the King of Sweden, nor to himself, or to the Protestant Cause in Germany.

Papists in Ireland.

The Papists in Ireland grew into a great height, Monasteries were there erected, Papists frequented their publick Meetings and Masses, with as much confidence, and as often as the Protestants did their Churches; and some of their Priests being apprehended, by authority of the Governnours, were tumultuously rescued by the people of Dublin.

Earl of Essex.

The Earl of Essex made a second adventure of Marriage with a Daughter of Sir William Pawlet, who was of great Beauty, but little Fortune; some suspicion was raised touching her, and a Divorce persuaded: but she had at length a Child, and the Earl her Husband owned it.

Impropriations.

The Feoffees in trust for the buying in of Impropriations to be bestowed upon preaching Ministers, were brought into the Exchequer, for the breach of their trust, and for bestowing Maintenance upon Nonconformists; their Corporation was dissolved, and their Money adjudged to the King.

Huntley. The High Commission Court.

Huntley, before-mentioned, being grievously censured in the High Commission Court, and by them

Anno 1630. them impriſoned, brought his Action of falſe Imprisonment againſt the Keeper Mr. Barker, and ſome of the Commiſſioners by name.

The Attorney General by the command of the King, moved the King's Bench, that the Commiſſioners might be ſpared, and the proceedings to be only againſt the Gaoler; upon much debate, it was at laſt ordered, that two of the Commiſſioners only ſhould anſwer.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury who did blow the Coal in this buſineſs, and had engaged the Commiſſioners in the Cauſe, being firſt ſet on foot by himſelf in wrong courſes, did preſs the King by the Biſhop of London to ſtay the Proceedings againſt the Commiſſioners.

Meſſage to the Chief Juſtice. The King ſent his Advocate, Dr. Rives, to the Chief Juſtice, requiring him, that there ſhould be no farther proceeding in the Cauſe, till he had ſpoken with him.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, We receive the Meſſage; but upon Conſultation together, the Judges conceived the Meſſage not to ſtand with their Oaths, commanding an indefinite ſtay of a Cauſe between Party and Party, and might ſtop the courſe of Juſtice ſo long as the King would. And they conceived the Doctor no fit Meſſenger; all Meſſages from the King to them, being uſually by the Lord Keeper, or the King's Attorney, in Cauſes touching the courſe of Juſtice.

By the Court's deſire, the Chief Juſtice acquainted the Lord Keeper herewith, and Biſhop Laud, and they both ſaid, the Meſſage was miſtaken, and that the King intended to be in Town again within ſeven or eight days, and then to ſpeak with the Judges about it.

This Interpretation qualified the Meſſage, and the Lord Keeper ſeemed to agree, that the Commiſſioners ought not to be exempted from anſwering, but that there ſhould be as much ſlowneſs in it, as might ſtand with Juſtice; otherwiſe the Commiſſioners would be weary of their places, to be put to ſuch trouble and charges.

My Father inſiſted on three Points.

1. That it was againſt Law, to exempt, or privilege any Man from anſwering the Action of another that would ſue him.

2. If the Court ſhould exempt any, where ſhould they begin, and where ſhould they end?

3. That it ſtood with the King's Monarchical Power, that it might be lawful for any Subject to complain before him of any other Subject, and to be anſwered in that Complaint.

The High Commiſſioners not contented with the Judge's Anſwer herein, cauſed the King to aſſume the Matter to himſelf, who ſent for the Judges; and in the Preſence of the Lord Keeper and others, commanded the Judges not to put the Defendants to Anſwer.

This was at the Importunity of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Biſhop of London preſſed the Buſineſs violently on the behalf of the Commiſſioners.

The King's expreſs Command. The Judges Anſwer. At laſt they parted, charged with the King's expreſs Command, that they ſhould not put the Commiſſioners to anſwer; and the Judges ſtoutly anſwered, that they could not without Breach of their Oaths perform that Command; and ſo they parted in diſpleaſure.

Afterwards by the King's ſpecial Command, this Matter was handled at the Council-Table, in Preſence of the Judges; and after long Debate and Hearing of the Biſhops of London and Winchester, two of the Privy Council, and of the Judges, and King's Attorney; it was agreed, that the Commiſſioners ſhould anſwer. And by the ſtout Carriage and Honeſty of the Judges, this was a good and quiet End of an angry Cauſe. 6 Car.

Some of the impriſoned Parliament-men upon their Petition, were remov'd from the Priſons wherein they then were, to other Priſons to prevent the danger of the Sickneſs then increaſing. Sir Miles Hobert put in Sureties for his good Behaviour, and ſo was diſcharged from his Impriſonment.

Sir John Walter died, a grave and learned Judge; he fell into the King's diſpleaſure, charged by his Majeſty for dealing cautelouſly, and not plainly with him, in the Buſineſs concerning the Parliament-men: as if he had given his Opinion to the King privately one way, and thereby brought him on the Stage, and there left him, and then was of another Judgment. Walter died.

His Opinion was contrary to all the reſt of the Judges, That a Parliament-man for Miſdemeanour in the Houſe, criminally, out of his Office and Duty, might be only impriſoned, and not farther proceeded againſt: which ſeemed very ſtrange to the other Judges, becauſe it could not appear, whether the Party had committed an Offence, unleſs he might be admitted to his Anſwer. His Opinion.

The King diſcharged him of his Service by Meſſage, yet he kept his Place of chief Baron, and would not leave it but by legal Proceeding; becauſe his Patent of it was, Quam diu ſe bene geſſerit, and it muſt be tried, whether he did, bene ſe gerere, or not: He never ſat in Court after the King forbad him, yet held his Place till he died. His Patent.

The Judges were ſent for to be conſulted with, touching the Trial of the Lord Audley, who was indicted for a Rape committed upon his Wife, with his Aſſiſtance, by one of his own Servants, and for Buggery. Lord Audley's Trial.

The Trial was very ſolemn before the Lord Keeper, made Lord High Steward for that Day, and eight Judges Aſſiſtants, and twenty ſeven Peers, the Jury or Judges of the Fact. The Matters were of the moſt horrid and foul Wickedneſs that ever was heard of, and therefore I have eſteemed it not convenient to preſerve the Memory of the Particulars of ſuch infamous and beaſtly Abominations.

By Letters from the Lord Keeper, all the Judges of the King's Bench were required to come up to London, and the Buſineſs was for their Advice, touching the Conference had in Germany, between certain Scots, about making of the Marqueſs Hambleton Head of a Party againſt the King, and his Kingdoms of England and Scotland, and what was fit for the King to do thereupon.

The Lord Rea a Scotch Baron, did impeach Ramſey and Meldran, for moving him to this Conſpiracy. They denied it punctually, and no Witneſs could be produced; Ramſey a Soldier offered to clear himſelf by Combate, that he was innocent, and the Appellant Rea accepted of the Challenge. The King was deſirous it ſhould be put upon a Duel, and the Judges were conſulted with: 1. What the Offence was? 2. Where the Trial ſhould be. Rea and Ramſey.

1. They all with the Lord Keeper were of Opinion, That it was an high and horrible Treaſon, if that in the Examinations were true. Appeal of Treaſon.

2. That the Trial might be by an Appeal of Treaſon, upon which Combate might be joined; but that the King muſt make a Conſtable durante beneplacito, for the Marſhal could not take the Appeal without him, and that it muſt be after the manner of the Civil Law, the Judges not to intermeddle. Judges Opinions.

The

Anno 1631. The Judges were alſo of Opinion, That this Proceeding before the Conſtable and Marſhal, was, as it was before the Stat. 35 H. VIII. c. 2. and that that Statute deviſed a Way how to try foreign Treaſons in England, but did not take away the other, and that the Stat. 1 Mar. cap. 10. did not take it away, nor intend it; and that a Conviction in this Appeal was no Corruption of Blood, nor a Forfeiture at the Common Law.

According to the Advice of the Judges, there was a Court of the Conſtable and Marſhal appointed, and the Earl of Lindſey made Conſtable for that purpoſe, and the Proceedings between Rea and Ramſey in that Court, were very ſolemn, and Multitudes of People attending that Novelty.

In this Trial it was delivered for Doctrine, That if the Defendant do ſend a Challenge to the Appellant, it is a Proof of the Defendant's Guilt.

That no Teſtimony is to be neglected in matter of Treaſon. And the Story in Livy was cited, That it is not baſe to undergo any Office to ſave a Nation, but that it was unbecoming a Gentleman to fiſh for Circumſtances, and then to be an Informer.

That in France the holding up of the Hand is taking an Oath, and in this Caſe it was urged, That if Ramſey be guilty of Treaſon, that Rea is ſo likewiſe; for that both did ſpeak the Words in the Accuſation. The Buſineſs was taken up by the King, through the Intereſt of the Marqueſs Hambleton, whoſe Servant Ramſey was; and the Lord Rea returned to his Command under the King of Sweden in Germany.

Sir Nich. Hyde. Sir Nicholas Hyde chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, died in Auguſt this Year; he was promoted to that Place by the Duke of Buckingham, and demeaned himſelf in it with good Integrity and Prudence in thoſe difficult Times; he was ſomewhat reſerved, and not affable.

Queſtions to the Judges touching the Clergy. In Michaelmas Term certain Queſtions were propounded to the Judges, touching the Clergy:

1. Whether Clergy-men were bound to find Watch and Ward, Day or Night. To this the Anſwer was deferred, till the Judges had informed themſelves of the Practice in the Countries where they went Circuit.

2. Whether Clergy-men might be compelled to take Apprentices, by the Stat. 43 El. of the Poor. On this all agreed, that no Man was out of the Statute, but there was a Diſcretion to be uſed in the Juſtices of Peace, to conſider where it was fit to put the Child to be kept, and where it was fitter to take Money toward the putting of it out. And it was held, that the Meaning of the Statute was not for the Education of them in Arts, but for Charity to keep them, and relieve them, from turning to Roguery and Idleneſs; ſo a Man's Houſe was, as it were, an Hoſpital in that Caſe, rather than a Shop of Trade; for they might be brought up to Husbandry, Cookery, Dairy, and the like Services, in an Houſe. This Caſe I have reported, becauſe it ſheweth ſomewhat of the Expectation and Temper of the Clergy in that time.

Oxford. The ſame likewiſe appeared by Proceedings againſt ſome of the Univerſity of Oxford, for Sermons preached by them againſt Arminianiſm, and upon other Points of Religion, then in Controverſy; upon which divers of them were cenſured, and ſome expelled the Univerſity.

Much difference of Opinion was alſo preached and publiſhed, touching the Obſervation of the Lord's Day: And in the North they kept their Wakes and Ale-Meetings upon the Sabbath-day. Whereof Complaint being made at the Aſſizes, Judge Richardſon was ſo hardy, as to make an Order to ſuppreſs them. But the Biſhops took this as an intruding upon the Eccleſiaſtical Power, and Biſhop Laud complaining of it to the King, the Judge was check'd, and occaſion was taken from hence, to republiſh the former Book, for Allowance of Paſtimes upon the Lord's Day, which was not very pleaſing to many, who were no Puritans, as well as to them generally. 6 Car. Books of Sports.

About this time the Repair of Paul's was ſet on work, chiefly by the Zeal of Biſhop Laud; and new Images and Ornaments other than formerly, were ſet up, to the diſcontent of many Perſons. Repair of Paul's.

The King came himſelf to this Church, and made a kind of Proceſſion to view it, and granted a Commiſſion to ſome Biſhops and others, to have a Contribution, and to ſee the Work done: Some affirm that about eighty thouſand Pounds was gathered for it, and Sir Paul Pindar is remembred to have laid out nineteen thouſand Pounds of his own Money towards it. Sir Paul Pindar.

A Piece of London Bridge was burnt down.

The King fell ſick of the Small Pox, but was well recovered again to the Joy of his Subjects.

Anno 1632. 7 Car.

The Chancellor of Poland came Ambaſſador hither for Aſſiſtance againſt the Turks, and got ſome Money, and two thouſand Men of our King. He was bred up a Lawyer, and at length came to be a principal Civil Officer of Juſtice, and was alſo at the ſame time a great Commander in the Army.

In November our Queen was brought to Bed of the Princeſs Mary. The Princeſs Mary born.

Our King ſent an Ambaſſador to the King of Sweden, in behalf of the Prince Elector, in whoſe Country, Guſtavus then was become Maſter of the Field; but his Succeſſes cauſed him to propound the harder Conditions to the Elector, to hold his own Patrimony, that he refuſed them; but afterwards the King of Sweden by Mediation came to more moderate Terms. Ambaſſador to Sweden.

But that Buſineſs was cut off by the death of that King, which in its time will be remembred.

In Eaſter-Term the Buſineſs of the death of Doctor Lamb was in the King's Bench, wherein it appeared that he was neither Dr. nor any way lettered, but a Man odious to the Vulgar, for ſome Rumours that went of him, that he was a Conjurer, or Sorcerer, and he was quarrelled with in the Streets in London, and as the People more and more gathered about him, ſo they pelted him with rotten Eggs, Stones, and other riff raff, juſtled him, beat him, bruiſed him, and ſo continued purſuing him from Street to Street, till they were five hundred People together following of him. This continued three Hours together until Night, and no Magiſtrate or Officer of the Peace once ſhewed himſelf to ſtop this Tumult: ſo the poor Man being above eighty Years of Age, died of this Violence, and no Inquiſition was taken of it, nor any of the Malefactors diſcovered in the City. Dr. Lamb.

For this Negligence an Information was put into the King's Bench, by the Attorney Noy, againſt the Mayor and Citizens, and they ſubmitted to the Grace of the Court, and were in open Court fined fifteen hundred Marks, by the Common Law; not upon the Statute of 28 Edw. III. nor upon the Statute of 4 H. VIII. City of London fined.

This Trinity Term my Father fell ill of a Cold, which ſo increaſed upon him, that he was adviſed to go into the Country, whereupon he took his leave of his Brethren the Judges and Sergeants, and was chearful with them, but ſaid to them, God be with you, I ſhall never ſee you again, and this without the leaſt diſturbance or trouble of his Thoughts: And ſoon after he came into the Country, on 22*th* Day of June he died, and in his death Judge Whitelocke dies.

Anno 1632. the King loſt as good a Subject, his Country as good a Patriot, the People as juſt a Judge as ever lived; all honeſt Men lamented the loſs of him, no Man in his Age left behind him a more honoured Memory: His Reaſon was clear and ſtrong, and his Learning deep and general; he had the Latine Tongue ſo perfect, that ſitting Judge of Aſſize at Oxford, when ſome Foreigners, Perſons of Quality, being there, and coming to the Court to ſee the manner of our Proceedings in Matters of Juſtice, this Judge cauſed them to ſit down, and briefly repeated the Heads of his Charge to the Grand Jury in good and elegant Latin, and thereby informed the Strangers, and the Scholars of the Ability of our Judges, and the Courſe of our Proceedings in Matters of Law and Juſtice: He underſtood the Greek very well, and the Hebrew, and was verſed in the Jewiſh Hiſtories, and exactly knowing in the Hiſtory of his own Country, and in the Pedigrees of moſt Perſons of Honour and Quality in the Kingdom, and was much converſant in the Studies of Antiquity and Heraldry: He was not by any excelled in the Knowledge of his own Profeſſion of the Common Law of England, wherein his Knowledge of the Civil Law (whereof he was a Graduate in Oxford) was a help to him; his learned Arguments both at the Bar and Bench, will confirm this Truth.

Abbot dies. Soon after the death of my Father, there died a great Church-man, Abbot Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in a good old Age, and left behind him the Memory of a pious, learned, moderate Prelate; and in his Room ſucceeded Laud, then Biſhop of London, who was in eminent favour with the King, as appears by this Tranſlation of him to the Metropolitan Dignity of the Church of England, to be Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Laud made Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Some of our Stories relate, that not long after his Tranſlation to the See of Canterbury, Laud was offered a Cardinal's Cap from Rome, but that he refuſed, being as high already as England could advance him, and he would not be ſecond to any in another Kingdom.

This new Archbiſhop in the end of Summer, about Michaelmas, came from London to Oxford, there to attend the King, and to entertain him in the Univerſity, where Laud was alſo Chancellor.

Colonel Sanderſon was ſent by our King with two thouſand Engliſh to the Emperor of Ruſſia, to aſſiſt him againſt the King of Poland: He was there upon a private Difference between them, baſely murdered by Colonel Leſley a Scotchman.

The Muſcovites were overthrown by the Polanders, no Juſtice done upon Leſley; but he came to this deſerved End, that he was thrown down from a Tower upon the Ground, and ſo died.

The Proteſtants in Ireland were diſcontented at the Grace and Favour ſhewed to the Papiſts there: the Lord Wentworth was ſent over, as Deputy in that Kingdom, to ſettle the Affairs and People there.

Went-worth ſent into Ireland.

The King of Sweden proceeded ſucceſsfully in Germany, till the Battle of Lutzen, where he was ſlain; ſome ſay by one of his own People, others ſay by the Enemy: In the Fight he was trampled under foot by the Horſe, ſo that his Body could hardly be known: Papenheim was ſlain in the ſame Battle.

King of Sweden ſlain.

The Swedes contrary to expectation and courſe of others, at the death of their King were ſo inraged, that falling furiouſly upon the Imperialiſts, they gained a great Victory.

A little after this, the Prince Elector, King of Bohemia, died (as was ſuppoſed) of the Infection of the Plague, which he had taken at Cologne, or at Mentz. 7 Car.

Welleſtein was ſuſpected of Treachery, to have deſigned a Conjunction with the Swedes againſt the Emperor, and was ſuddenly murthered by Butler a Scotchman. Walleſtein murthered.

This Year died three Kings, Sigiſmund King of Poland, and Guſtavus Adolphus King of Sweden, and Frederick King of Bohemia, beſides many great Perſons both in England, and in foreign Parts, of every Degree and Sex.

The King ſent the Earl of Leiceſter Ambaſſador to the King of Denmark, to condole the death of his Mother, and to demand a Portion, due to our Queen, and to the Queen of Bohemia, according to the Law of Denmark. About this time, Mr. Prynne publiſhed his Book called Hiſtrio-Maſtix, by Licence of Archbiſhop Abbot's Chaplain, which being againſt Plays, and a Reference in the Table of the Book, to this effect, Women-actors notorious Whores, relating to ſome Women-actors, mentioned in his Book as he affirmeth. Prynne's Hiſtrio-Maſtix.

It happened, that about ſix Weeks after this, the Queen acted a Part in a Paſtoral, at Somerſet Houſe, and then the Archbiſhop Laud, and other Prelates, whom Prynne had angered, by ſome Books of his againſt Arminianiſm, and againſt the Juriſdiction of the Biſhops, and by ſome Prohibitions which he had moved, and got to the high Commiſſion Court.

Theſe Prelates, and their Inſtruments, the next Day after the Queen had acted her Paſtoral, ſhewed Prynne's Book againſt Plays, to the King, and that Place of it, Women-actors notorious Whores, and they informed the King and Queen, that Prynne had purpoſely written this Book, againſt the Queen, and her Paſtoral, whereas it was publiſhed ſix Weeks before that Paſtoral was acted.

Yet the King and Queen, though thus exaſperated, did direct nothing againſt him, till Laud ſet Doctor Heylin (who bare a great Malice to Prynne, for confuting ſome of his Doctrines) to peruſe Prynne's Books, and to collect the ſcandalous Points out of them; which Heylin did, though (as Prynne affirms) not at all warranted by the Text of his Book, but theſe two Gentlemen were well matched, and alike in other Things, though ſo much different in Divinity, or ſhew of it.

The Archbiſhop went with theſe Notes to Mr. Attorney Noy, on a Sabbath-Day Morning, and charged him to proſecute Prynne for this Book; which Noy afterwards did, rigorouſly enough in the Star Chamber, and in the mean time, the Biſhops, and Lords in the Star Chamber, ſent Prynne cloſe Priſoner to the Tower. Some in Scotland had given out in Speeches, that the King thought the Crown of Scotland not worth his Journey thither, and ſome Doubts were of ſecret Deſigns amongſt them, to ſet up there another King. The King's Progreſs to Scotland.

The King reſolves to go thither, and went with a Train of Lords, and others, ſuitable to his Dignity. At Edenburgh he was crowned, with all Shew of Affection and Duty, and in a Parliament then held, the Liberties of the Kirk are ſtood upon, the King gratified many of them with new Honours: Yet ſome began then to mutter, and afterwards to mutiny, the King was in ſome danger paſſing over Dumfrith; but returned back to London in ſafety.

Anno 1633. The Earl of Traquaire is made Treaſurer of Scotland, and the Parliament there, gave a Tax to the King, which the Scotch Nobles begged of him before it was gathered. The Lord Loudon began to make Oppoſition to the King; and to ſhew his Intentions in that Parliament.

October 13. the Duke of York Born. The Queen was brought to Bed of another Son, James; who was created Duke of York, the Title reſerved for the ſecond Sons of the King.

In Michaelmas Term was ſome diſcourſe about the Communion Table in St. Gregory's Church near Paul's; which by order of the Dean of Paul's, was removed and placed Altarwiſe, to the diſtaſte of ſeveral of the Pariſhioners, who at length appealed, and it came before the King and Council, who approved what the Dean had done.

Order was ſent to Scotland that the Prayers, and Divine Service ſhould be celebrated twice a Day in the King's Chapel there, after the manner uſed in England; and that the Communion ſhould be Monthly received on their Knees, and the Miniſters to wear the Surplice, and other Ceremonies to be obſerved. But the Dean of the Chapel there durſt not put theſe orders in Execution, for fear of diſpleaſing the People.

October 18. The King revived his Father's Declaration for tolerating lawful Sports (as it calls them) on the Lord's Day, which gave great diſtaſte to many, both others, as well as thoſe who were uſually termed Puritans.

About Allholantide, ſeveral of the principal Members of the Societies of the four Inns of Court, amongſt whom ſome were Servants to the King, had a deſign that the Inns of Court ſhould preſent their Service to the King and Queen, and teſtify their affections to them, by the outward and ſplendid viſible teſtimony of a Royal Maſque of all the four Societies joining together, to be by them brought to the Court, as an expreſſion of their Love, and Duty to their Majeſties.

Maſque of the Inns of Court.

This was hinted at in the Court and by them intimated to the chief of thoſe Societies, that it would be well taken from them, and ſome held it the more ſeaſonable, becauſe this action would manifeſt the difference of their opinion, from Mr. Prynne's new learning, and ſerve to confute his Hiſtro Maſtix againſt Interludes. This deſign took well with all the Inns of Court, eſpecially the younger ſort of them, and in order to put it in execution, the Benchers of each Society met, and agreed to have this Solemnity performed in the nobleſt and moſt ſtately manner, that could be invented.

The better to effect this, it was reſolved in each Houſe to chooſe two of their Members, whom they ſhould judge fitteſt, for ſuch a Buſineſs, to be a Committee, by joint aſſiſtance to carry on that affair.

In the middle Temple were choſen of this Committee, Mr. Edward Hyde, and my ſelf. For the Inner Temple, Sir Edward Herbert, and Mr. Selden. For Lincoln's-Inn, Mr. Attorney Noy, and Mr. Gerling. And for Gray's-Inn, Sir John Finch, and Mr. ——

This Committee, being impowered by the Benchers of each Society, met together, and, out of their own number, made ſeveral Sub-committees, one Sub-committee to take care of the poetical part of the Buſineſs; another for the ſeveral properties of the Maſquers, and Antimaſquers, and other Actors; another was for the Dancing, and to me in particular was committed the whole care and charge of all the Muſick for this great Maſque, which was ſo performed, that it excelled any Muſick that ever before that time had been heard in England.

The Buſineſs being thus diſtributed, each Sub-committee had their meetings, and carried on their Buſineſs committed to their care, and had Moneys provided by an equal proportion, by the Governors of each Society, who were not ſparing, in that moſt material part of every deſign and action. 8 Car.

I made choice of Mr. Simon Ivy, an honeſt and able Muſician, of excellent skill in his Art, and of Mr. Laws to compoſe the Airs, Leſſons, and Songs for the Maſque, and to be Maſter of all the Muſick under me: I alſo made choice of four of the moſt excellent Muſicians of the Queens Chapel, Monſieur la Mare; Monſieur du Vall, Monſieur Robert, and Monſieur Mari, and of divers others of Foreign Nations, who were moſt eminent in their Art, not in the leaſt neglecting any of my own Country-men, whoſe knowledge in Muſick rendred them uſeful in this Action, to bear their parts in the Muſick; and for the better preparation and practice of the Muſick, they had Meeetings together of Engliſh, French, Italians, Germans, and other Maſters of Muſick: forty Lutes at one time, beſides other Inſtruments and Voices of the moſt excellent Muſicians in Conſort: The reſt of the Sub-committees prepared all things in readineſs, according to their ſeveral Charges; and the Grandees, Maſter Attorney General Noy, Sir John Finch, Sir Edward Herbert, Mr. Selden, and all the reſt of the Committees took great pains, and neglected no Meetings for the management of this great Buſineſs of the Maſque, which they knew would be acceptable to their Maſter and Miſtreſs, and to all the Court.

The time for preſenting of this Maſque at Whitehall, was agreed to be on Candlemas Night to end Chriſtmas: and the ſeveral parts of it being brought near to a readineſs for action, Hyde and my ſelf were ſent by the Committee to the Lord Chamberlain, the Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, and to Sir Henry Vane the Comptroller of the King's Houſe to adviſe with them, and to take order about the Scenes and other matters relating to the Maſque, and about preparing things in the Banqueting Houſe in order thereunto.

The Gallery behind the State, at the end of the Banqueting Houſe, was reſerved for the Gentlemen of the Inns of Court, who ſhould come thither to ſee their Maſque, that there they might ſit together, and none elſe to be admitted with them into that Place.

The Dancers, Maſquers, Anti-Maſquers, and Muſicians, did before-hand practiſe in the place where they were to preſent the Maſque, and the Scenes were artificially prepared at the lower end of the Banqueting Houſe: The grand Maſquers were four Gentlemen of each Inn of Court, moſt ſuitable for their Perſons, Dancing, and Garb for that Buſineſs: and it was ordered, that they ſhould be drawn in four rich Chariots, four Maſquers in each Chariot, by ſix Horſes in a Chariot; but there grew a difference about the order of their going, which of the Inns of Court ſhould have the firſt Chariot, ſo of the reſt in their order; and how the ſeveral grand Maſquers ſhould ſit in the ſeveral Chariots, who in the firſt or chiefeſt Place, and who in the ſecond, third, and laſt Place. To ſatisfy this, it was propunded, and aſſented to by the Commitee, that the Chariots ſhould be made after the faſhion of the Roman Triumphant Chariots, and being of an Oval form, in the Seats there would be no difference of place in them.

Anno 1633. For the ſeveral Colours, and for the precedence of the Chariots, it was agreed that one of each Houſe of the Committee ſhould throw the Dice, and as that happened the Society to be bound of which he that threw was a Member.

On Candlemas-day in the Afternoon, the Maſquers Horſemen, Muſicians, Dancers, and all that were Actors in this Buſineſs, according to order met at Ely-houſe in Holborn, there the grand Committee ſat all Day to order all Affairs; and when the Evening was come, all things being in full readineſs, they began to ſet forth in this order down Chancery-Lane to Whitehall.

The firſt that marched were twenty Footmen, in Scarlet Liveries with Silver-lace, each one having his Sword by his ſide, a Baton in one Hand, and a Torch lighted in the other Hand; theſe were the Marſhal's Men who cleared the Streets, made way, and were all about the Marſhal, waiting his Commands. After them, and ſometimes in the midſt of them came the Marſhal, then Mr. Darrel, afterwards knighted by the King: He was of Lincoln's-Inn, an extraordinary handſome proper Gentleman; he was mounted upon one of the King's beſt Horſes, and richeſt Saddles, and his own Habit was exceeding rich and glorious; his Horſemanſhip very gallant; and beſides his Marſhal's Men, he had two Lacquies, who carried Torches by him, and a Page in Livery that went by him, carrying his Cloak.

After him followed one hundred Gentlemen of the Inns of Court, five and twenty choſen out of each houſe; of the moſt proper and handſome young Gentlemen of the Societies, every one of them was gallantly mounted on the beſt Horſes, and with the beſt Furniture that the King's Stable, and the Stables of all the Noblemen in Town would afford, and they were forward on this occaſion to lend them to the Inns of Court.

Every one of theſe hundred Gentlemen were in very rich Clothes, ſcarce any thing but Gold and Silver-lace to be ſeen of them; and each Gentleman had a Page and two Lacquies waiting on him in his Livery by his Horſe-ſide: The Lacquies caried Torches, and the Page his Maſter's Cloak. The richneſs of their Apparel and Furniture glittering by the light of a multitude of torches attending on them, with the motion and ſtirring of their mettled Horſes, and the many and various gay Liveries of their Servants; but eſpecially the perſonal Beauty and Gallantry of the handſome young Gentlemen, made the moſt glorious and ſplendid ſhew that ever was beheld in England.

After the Horſemen came the Antimaſquers, and as the Horſemen had their Muſick, about a dozen of the beſt Trumpeters proper for them, and in their Livery, ſounding before them; ſo the firſt Antimaſque being of Cripples, and Beggars on Horſeback, had their Muſick of Keys and Tongs, and the like, ſnapping and yet playing in a Conſort before them.

Theſe Beggars were alſo mounted, but on the pooreſt leaneſt Jades that could be gotten out of the Dirt-carts, or elſewhere: and the variety and change from ſuch noble Muſick, and gallant Horſes, as went before them, unto their proper Muſick, and pitiful Horſes, made both of them the more pleaſing.

The Habits and Properties of theſe Cripples and Beggars, were moſt ingeniouſly fitted (as of all the reſt) by the Committee's direction, wherein (as in the whole Buſineſs) Mr. Attorney Noy, Sir John Finch, Sir Edward Herbert, Mr. Selden, thoſe great and eminent Perſons, as all the reſt of the Committee, had often Meetings, and took extraordinary care and pains in the ordering of this Buſineſs, and it ſeemed a pleaſure to them. 8 Car.

After the Beggars Antimaſque, came Men on Horſeback playing upon Pipes, Whiſtles, and Inſtruments ſounding Notes like thoſe of Birds of all ſorts, and in excellent Conſort, and were followed by the Antimaſque of Birds: This was an Owl in an Ivy-buſh, with many ſeveral ſorts of other Birds, in a cluſtre about the Owl, gazing as it were upon her: theſe were little Boys put into covers of the ſhapes of thoſe Birds, rarely fitted, and ſitting on ſmall Horſes, with Footmen going by them, with Torches in their Hands; and here were ſome beſides to look unt the Children, and this was very pleaſant to the Beholders.

After this Antimaſque, came other Muſicians on Horſeback playing upon Bag-pipes, Hornpipes, and ſuch kind of Northern Muſick, ſpeaking the following Antimaſque of Projectors to be of the Scotch and Northern Quarters; and theſe, as all the reſt, had many Footmen with Torches waiting on them.

Firſt in this Antimaſque, rode a Fellow upon a little Horſe, with a great Bit in his Mouth, and upon the Man's Head was a Bit, with Headſtall and Rains faſtned, and ſignified a Projector, who begged a Patent, that none in the Kingdom might ride their Horſes, but with ſuch Bits as they ſhould buy of him.

Then came another Fellow with a bunch of Carrots upon his Head, and a Capon upon his Fiſt, deſcribing a Projector who begg'd a Patent of Monopoly, as the firſt Inventor of the Art to feed Capons fat with Carrots, and that none but himſelf might make uſe of that Invention, and have the Privilege for fourteen Years, according to the Statute.

Several other Projectors were in like manner perſonated in this Antimaſque; and it pleaſed the Spectators the more, becauſe by it an Information was covertly given to the King, of the unfitneſs and ridiculouſneſs of theſe Projects againſt the Law: and the Attorney Noy, who had moſt knowledge of them, had a great hand in this Antimaſque of the Projectors.

After this, and the reſt of the Antimaſques were paſt, all which are not here remembred; there came ſix of the chief Muſicians on Horſeback upon Foot-clothes, and in the Habits of Heathen Prieſts, and Footmen carrying of Torches by them.

After theſe Muſicians, followed a large open Chariot drawn with ſix brave Horſes, with large Plumes of Feathers on their Heads and Buttocks: The Coachman and Poſtilion in rich antique Liveries. In the Chariot were about a dozen Perſons, in ſeveral Habits of the Gods and Goddeſſes, and by them many Footmen on all ſides bearing Torches.

After this Chariot followed ſix more of the Muſicians on Horſeback, with Foot-clothes habited, and attended with Torches as the former were.

After them came another large open Chariot like the former, drawn with ſix gallant Horſes with Feathers, Liveries, and Torches, as the other had.

Theſe Chariots were made purpoſely for this occaſion; and in this latter Chariot were about a dozen Muſicians in like Habit (but all with ſome variety and diſtinction) as thoſe in the firſt Chariot.

Theſe

Anno 1633.

These going immediately next before the Grand Masquer's Chariots, play'd upon excellent and loud Musick all the way as they went.

After this Chariot came six more Musicians on Foot-clothes, Horses habited and attended as the other.

Then came the first Chariot of the Grand Masquers, which was not so large as those that went before, but most curiously framed, carved, and painted with exquisite Art, and purposely for this service and occasion. The form of it was after that of the Roman Triumphant Chariots, as near as could be gathered by some old Prints and Pictures extant of them: The Seats in it were made of an Oval form in the back end of the Chariot so that there was no Precedence in them, and the Faces of all that sat in it might be seen together.

The colours of the first Chariot were Silver and Crimson, given by the Lot to Grays-Inn, as I remember: the Chariot was all over painted richly with these Colours, even the Wheels of it most artificially laid on, and the carved Work of it was as curious for that Art, and it made a stately Show. It was drawn with four Horses, all on breast, and they were covered to their Heels all over with cloth of Tissue, of the Colours of Crimson, and Silver, huge Plumes of red and white Feathers on their Heads and Buttocks; the Coachman's Cap and Feather, his long Coat, and his very Whip and Cushion of the same Stuff and Colour.

In this Chariot sat the four Grand Masquers of Grays-Inn, their Habits, Doublets, Trunk-hose, and Caps, of most rich cloth of Tissue, and wrought as thick with Silver Spangles as they could be placed, large white Silk Stockings up to their Trunk-hose, and rich Sprigs in their Caps; themselves proper and beautiful young Gentlemen.

On each side of the Chariot were four Footmen in Liveries of the colour of the Chariot, carrying huge Flamboys in their Hands, which with the Torches gave such a lustre to the Paintings, Spangles, and Habits, that hardly any thing could be invented to appear more glorious.

After this Chariot came six more Musicians on Foot-clothes, and in Habits like the former; these were followed by the second Chariot as the lot fell for the Middle-Temple; this differ'd not in any thing from the former, but in Colours only, which were of this Chariot Silver and Blue, the Chariot and Horses were covered and deck'd with Cloth of Tissue, of blue and Silver, as the former was, with Silver and Crimson.

In this second Chariot were the four Grand Masquers of the Middle-Temple, in the same Habits as the other Masquers were, and with the like Attendance, Torches and Flamboys, with the former. After these followed the third and fourth Chariots, and six Musicians between each Chariot, habited, on Foot-clothes, and Horses, as before. The Chariots were all of the same make, and alike carved and painted, differing only in the Colours.

In the third Chariot rode the Grand Masquers of the Inner-Temple: And in the fourth Chariot went those of Lincoln's-Inn, according to the Lot of each of them.

The Habits of the sixteen Grand Masquers were all the same, their Persons most handsome and lovely, the Equipage so full of State and height of Gallantry, that it never was out-done by any representation mentioned in our former Stories.

The Torches and flaming huge Flamboys born by the sides of each Chariot, made it seem light- 8 Car.
some as at Noon-day, but more glittering, and gave a full and clear light to all the Streets and Windows as they passed by. The march was slow, in regard of their great number, but more interrupted by the Multitude of the Spectators in the Streets, besides the Windows, and they all seemed loth to part with so glorious a Spectacle.

In the mean time the Banqueting-house at Whitehall was so crouded with fair Ladies, glittering with their rich Cloths and richer Jewels, and with Lords and Gentlemen of great Quality, that there was scarce room for the King and Queen to enter in. The King and Queen stood at a Window looking straight-forward into the Street, to see the Masque come by; and being delighted with the noble Bravery of it, they sent to the Marshal to desire that the whole Show might fetch a turn about the Tilt-yard, that their Majesties might have a double view of them; which was done acccordingly, and then they all alighted at Whitehall-Gate, and were conducted to several Rooms and Places prepared for them.

The King and Queen, and all their noble Train being come in, the Masque began, and was incomparably performed in the Dancing, Speeches, Musick, and Scenes; the Dances, Figures, Properties, the Voices, Instruments, Songs, Airs, Composures, the Words and Actions, were all of them exact, and none failed in their Parts of them, and the Scenes were most curious and costly.

The Queen did the honour to some of the Masquers to dance with them her self, and to judge them as good Dancers as ever she saw; and the great Ladies were very free and civil in dancing with all the Masquers, as they were taken out by them.

Thus they continued in their Sports until it was almost Morning, and then the King and Queen retiring to their Chamber, the Masquers and Inns of Court Gentlemen were brought to a stately Banquet, and after that was dispersed, every one departed to their own Quarters.

Thus was this earthly Pomp and Glory, if not Vanity, soon past over and gone, as if it had never been.

The Queen who was much delighted with these Solemnities, was so taken with this Show and Masque, that she desired to see it acted over again: whereupon an Intimation being given to the Lord Mayor of London, he invited the King and Queen, and the Inns of Court Masquers to the City, and entertained them with all State and Magnificence, at Merchant-Taylors Hall,

Thither marched through the City the same Show, that went before to Whitehall, and the same Masque was again presented to them in the City; the same Horsemen, Lacquies, Liveries, Torches, Habits, Chariots, Musick, and all other parts of the former Solemnity, and in the same State and Equipage, as it was before presented.

This also gave great contentment to their Majesties, and no less to the Citizens, especially to those of the younger sort, and of the Female Sex: and it was to the great honour, and no less charge of the Lord Mayor Freeman.

The Persons imployed in this Masque, were paid justly, and liberally; some of the Musick had one hundred Pounds a-piece, so that the whole Charge of the Musick came to about a thousand Pounds: The Clothes of the Horsemen, and the Liveries of their Pages and Lacquies, which were at their own particular Charge, were Anno 1633. were reckon'd one with another at a hundred Pound a Suit at the leaſt, and one hundred of thoſe Suits to amount to ten thouſand Pounds. The charges of all the reſt of the Maſque, and matters belonging to it, were reckon'd at as much more, and ſo the Charge of the whole Maſque which was born by the Societies, and by the particular Members of it, was accounted to be above one and twenty thouſand Pounds.

A little while after the Maſque was performed, the Committee order'd Sir John Finch, Mr. Gerling, Mr. Hyde, and my ſelf, to attend the King and Queen, in the name of the four Inns of Court, to return their humble Thanks for their Majeſties gracious acceptance of the tender of their Service in the late Maſque. They were firſt brought to the King, who gave to all of them his hand to kiſs; then Sir John Finch in the name of the reſt ſpake to the King to this effect: Sir, by the Command of your Majeſty's moſt affectionate and loyal Subjects, the Readers and Gentlemen of the four Inns of Court, we are here to attend you with their moſt humble Thanks, for your great Favour to them, in your gracious acceptance of the Tender of their Service and Affections to your Majeſty, in the late Maſque preſented to you, and for vouchſafing your Royal Preſence at it.

Gentlemen, pray aſſure thoſe from whom you come, that we are exceeding well pleaſed with that Teſtimony which they lately gave us, of their great Reſpect and Affection to us, which was very acceptable, and performed with that Gallantry, and in ſo excellent a manner, that I cannot but give them thanks for it, and ſhall be ready upon all Occaſions to manifeſt the good Opinion I have of them, and to do them and you in particular any favour.

From the King they were brought to the Queen, and kiſſed her hand, and Sir John Finch her Attorney, having made the like Compliment to her Majeſty, ſhe anſwered quick, and well pleaſed,

That ſhe never ſaw any Maſque more noble, nor better performed than this was, which ſhe took as a particular Reſpect to her ſelf, as well as to the King her Husband, and deſired that her thanks might be returned to the Gentlemen for it.

This being reported to the Benchers of each Society, they gave thanks to their reſpective Members that were of the Committee, for the Honour they had done to the Society, by the well ordering of the Buſineſs of the Maſque.

Thus theſe Dreams paſt, and theſe Pomps vaniſhed. It will be now time to return to the publick Story of the latter part of this Year.

The Archbiſhop Laud procured a ſharp Sentence to be paſſed in the Star-Chamber againſt Prynne that he ſhould be impriſoned during his Life, fined 5000 l. expelled Lincoln's-Inn, disbarr'd and diſabled to Practice, degraded of his Degree in the Univerſity, be ſet on the Pillory and his Ears to be cut off, and his Book to be burnt by the common Hangman, which Sentence was as ſeverely executed.

But before the Fine was eſtreated, the Archbiſhop and other high Commiſſioners by their Warrant cauſed Prynne's Book and Papers to be ſeized upon and brought away from his Lodging, and had them peruſed and ſifted to find matter againſt him, of which Prynne complaining in the Star-Chamber, the Archbiſhop denied any ſuch Warrant.

Dr. Baſtwick. During Prynne's Impriſonment, Dr. Baſtwick a Phyſician was brought into the High Commiſſion Court, for his Book called Elenchus Papiſmi, & Flagellum Epiſcoporum Latialium, in Anſwer to one Short a Papiſt, who maintained the Pope's Supremacy, the Maſs, and Popery: And Baſtwick's Epiſtle to his Book declared, that he intended nothing againſt our Biſhops, but againſt thoſe of Rome. 8 Car.

Yet this Doctor was ſentenc'd by the high Commiſſioners in a thouſand pound Fine, to be excommunicated, debarr'd his practice of Phyſick, his Books to be burnt, and he to be in Priſon till he made a Recantation, and this was for maintaining the King's Prerogative againſt Papacy, as the Doctor pleaded.

But on the other part, one who was a fierce Papiſt, named Chowney, wrote a Book in defence of the Popiſh Religion, and of the Church of Rome, averring it to be a true Church; and the Book was dedicated to, and patronized by the Archbiſhop; ſo far was Chowney from being puniſhed and queſtioned for that Doctrine.

In the Cenſure of Baſtwick, all the Biſhops then preſent, denied openly that they held their Juriſdiction, as Biſhops from the King, for which perhaps they might have been cenſured themſelves in the times of Hen. II. or Ed. III. Biſhops independent of the King.

But they affirmed, That they had their Juriſdiction from God only, which denial of the Supremacy of the King under God, Hen. VIII. would have taken ill, and it may be would have confuted them by his kingly Arguments, and Regia manu; but theſe Biſhops publickly diſavowed their dependance on the King.

And the Archbiſhop maintained the Book of Chowney, and that the Romiſh Church was a true Church, and erred not in Fundamentals; and ſomewhat was noted to paſs from him and other Biſhops in defaming the holy Scriptures; and Calvin was very much ſlighted and abuſed by them.

I cannot preciſely aver all this, though I heard moſt of it, as it is here ſet down; and heard the reſt of it, to this purpoſe, from thoſe who were preſent at the debating of theſe Matters in the high Commiſſion Court.

Anno 1634. 9 Car.

Our Coaſts were much infeſted by Pirates, even by Turks and Algiers Men, to the great prejudice of Trade. The Dutch-men became almoſt Maſters of the Sea in the Northern Fiſhing; Overtures were made concerning Herring-fiſhing, and Buſſes, for our own Coaſts, and to prevent Strangers. Some Petty-Quarrels fell out between us and the Hollanders about thoſe Matters of Fiſhing; upon which Grotius did write his Book of Mare liberum, but is clearly anſwered by that learned Treatiſe of Selden's called Mare clauſum. Mare liberum. Mare clauſum.

The King finding the Controverſy begun, and that it muſt be maintained by Force, which his want of Money could not do; he by the Advice of his Attorney Noy, and of the Lord Keeper Coventry, who as far as his Learning in thoſe matters did extend (and that was not far) did approve and aſſiſt the Project.

And by Advice of his Privy-Council, and Council Learned, the King requires Ship-Money. The Writ for it was at firſt but to maritime Towns and Counties; but that not ſufficing, other Writs were iſſued out to all Counties to levy Ship-money. Ship-money.

Yet great care was taken to favour the Clergy, all the reſt of the People, except Courtiers and Officers, generally murmur at this Tax; although it was politickly laid with all Equality, yet the great Objection againſt it was, becauſe it was impoſed Anno 1634. impoſed without aſſent of Parliament, and that therefore it was unlawful.

Ambaſſador of Sweden ſlighted. The old Chancellor Oxenſtierne of Sweden, the great Director of their Affairs both at Home and Abroad, particularly in Germany, during the Queen's Minority, ſent his eldeſt Son Grave John Oxenſtierne Ambaſſador to our King with Credentials from the Queen of Sweden, as the Chancellor and his Son both affirm to me. But Grave John the Ambaſſador, and the Authority from whence he came, were ſo unworthily ſlighted in our Court, who were not willing to give any Aſſiſtance to the Prince Elector againſt the Emperor, that in great diſtaſte, Grave John, who was high enough in his own Thoughts, and for the honour of his Miſtreſs the Queen, went away in diſcontent from England, and neither he nor his Father, nor Family, were Friends to our King, after this Affront put upon them, which I have cauſe to know.

The Parliament of Ireland gave ſome Subſidies to the King, and the 39 Articles of our Church were there by that Parliament eſtabliſhed.

Noy dies. Mr. Attorney Noy having ſet on foot the Tax of Ship-money, leaveth it and the World. He died of the Diſtemper of the Stone.

Balmerino. The Scots began to murmur againſt their laſt Parliament; the Lord Balmerino was queſtioned about a Letter written by King James to Pope Clement, to compliment him. It was ſuggeſted, that this Lord's Father being Secretary to the King, did draw the Letter, and ſhuffling it among other Papers, did by that means, get it to be ſigned by the King. Yet was this Lord afterwards not only pardon'd, but honoured and preferred.

The diſcontented Party in Scotland had Intelligence of the Diſcontents in England, and the Cardinal Richlieu ſent his Agents to foment the Diſcontents in both Kingdoms, who met with Matters and Perſons very apt to be kindled.

Treaſurer Weſton dies. The Lord Treaſurer Weſton died, not much lamented of the People, who generally eſteemed him to be a covert Papiſt, and an Agent for Rome, and though himſelf might be diſpenſed with, yet moſt of his Family made open Profeſſion of the Popiſh Religion, and continue in the ſame Profeſſion.

Sir Edw. Coke dies. Sir Edward Coke died this year alſo; who was of greater Reputation with the People, but of leſs at Court; whoſe illegal Actions he earneſtly oppoſed in Parliament, being uſually choſen a Member of the Houſe of Commons, after he was put off his publick Offices. He was a Man of great Learning and Induſtry, and had the value of a juſt and impartial Magiſtrate.

The Imperialiſts and Swedes fought a bloody Battle at Nortington, where the Swedes were overthrown, 12000 of them ſlain, and 6000 taken Priſoners; but hereupon enſued a Peace between them. The Emperor being wiſely the more inclined to it, after his being victorious in the War.

Spotſwood. Spotteſwood, Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, was made Chancellor of Scotland, and though he was a wiſe and learned Man, and of good Reputation, and Life, yet it gave Offence to many, that he being a Clergyman, ſhould be inveſted with that Dignity; which they affirmed not to have been done before ſince the Reformation.

At Abington, complaint was made to the Mayor, and to the Recorder, of divers in the Town, who were Nonconformiſts to the Orders and Ceremonies of the Church in divine Service, as that ſome did not ſtand up at the Creed, nor bow to the Altar, nor at the name of Jeſus, nor receive the Sacrament kneeling at the high Altar, and the like.

For which ſome that were related to the Eccleſiaſtical Court complained to them, being Juſtices of the Peace for the Town, and deſir'd they would puniſh theſe Offenders; the Recorder anſwered them, that theſe Offences were more properly puniſhable by the Eccleſiaſtical Judges in their Courts, than by Juſtices of Peace, and therefore he adviſed them to inform the Chancellor of the Dioceſe, or other Officers of that Juriſdiction concerning thoſe Matters, that Proceedings might be had therein according to their Law, but he thought it not fit for him to interpoſe in thoſe Matters. The Complainers ſeemed much unſatisfy'd herewith; but the Mayor being ſomewhat inclin'd to the Opinions of the Nonconformiſts, was not eaſily to be perſuaded to puniſh them, and the Recorder himſelf was much for liberty of Conſcience, and favourable in that Point, ſo that although the other Party urged much to have the Nonconformiſts puniſh'd, yet they put it off and would not do it, for which the Recorder was afterwards required to attend the Council-Table, to anſwer ſome Complaints made againſt him from Abington, That he did comply with and countenance the Nonconformiſts there, and refuſed to puniſh thoſe who did not bow at the name of Jeſus, and to the Altar, and refuſed to receive the Sacrament kneeling at the high Altar, and the like Offenders, and that he was diſaffected to the Church, and the Ceremonies thereof enjoyn'd by Authority. 9 Car.

But the Recorder alledged in his own Vindication, why he did not puniſh thoſe againſt whom the Complaints were made, That he knew no Common Law nor Statute in force for the Puniſhment of them, eſpecially by Juſtices of the Peace; and that the Complainers did not prefer any Indictment againſt them, and that the Matters whereof the pretended Offenders were accuſed, were merely (as the Accuſers acknowledged) Spiritual Matters, proper for the Spiritual Judges, (as they were called) and that he might have been cenſured to incroach upon the Juriſdiction and Rights of the Church if he ſhould have Cognizance of them, upon which the Council were ſatisfied, and diſmiſs'd him from further Attendance.

Anno 1635. 10 Car.

At the Quarter-Seſſions at Oxford I was put into the Chair in Court, tho' I was in colour'd Clothes, a Sword by my Side, and a falling Band which was unuſual for Lawyers in thoſe days, and in this Garb I gave the Charge to the Grand Jury; I took occaſion in this Place to enlarge my ſelf upon the point of Juriſdiction of the Temporal Courts in Matters Eccleſiaſtical and the Antiquity thereof, which I did the rather becauſe the Spiritual Men began in thoſe days to ſwell higher than ordinary, and to take it as an Injury to the Church that any thing ſavouring of the Spirituality ſhould be within the Cognizance of ignorant Laymen, yet I was wary in my Expreſſions, and ſo couched the Matter as it might ſeem naturally to ariſe from the Subject of the Diſcourſe, and not to be brought in purpoſely and by Head and Shoulders. The Gentlemen and Freeholders ſeemed well pleaſed with my charge and management of the Buſineſs of the Seſſions, and ſaid that they perceived that one might ſpeak as good Senſe in a Falling Band, as in a Ruff, and they treated me at that time, and at all times afterwards when I waited on them, with extraordinary Reſpect and Civility.

A Fleet ſet out. By the help of the Tax of Ship-money, a Navy was prepared of forty good Ships of War, and ſet out this Summer under the Earl of Lindſey, Admiral, Anno 1631. Admiral, and the Earl of Eſſex his Vice-Admiral, who had twenty Sail more for ſecuring of the narrow Seas, and of the Trade of England.

The King reſolves to proſecute his Deſign with a Navy Royal, to be ſet out yearly, and therefore it was at Court concluded to lay the Charge of Ship-money generally upon all Counties.

The Lord Keeper Coventry was ordered to direct the Judges to promote that Buſineſs, in their Circuits this Summer, and to perſuade the People to a ready obeying the Writs, and Payments of Ship-money for the next Year.

Lord Keeper's Speech. In purſuance hereof, his Lordſhip in his Charge to the Judges in the Star-Chamber, at the end of Midſummer-Term, after ſundry other Particulars, concluded as to this great Buſineſs to this effect.

You my Lords, the Judges, are commanded in your Charges at the Aſſizes, and at all Places opportunely to acquaint the People with His Majeſty's Care and Zeal to preſerve his, and the Kingdom's Honour, in the Dominion of the Sea by a powerful Fleet.

And you are to let them know how juſt it is for His Majeſty to require Ship-money for the common Defence, and with what Alacrity and Chearfulneſs they are bound in duty to contribute.

Some of the Judges put on this Buſineſs in their Charges at the Aſſizes, with great Zeal and Gravity, to advance the King's Pleaſure, but they did not convince many of the Legality of that Buſineſs.

The Hollanders made a League with the French, they were to invade Flanders by Land, and to infeſt Dunkirk; and the Hollanders to do it by Sea. They prevailed at Dieſt, and Tellemont, but the Inſolencies of the French and Dutch Soldiers cauſed the Natives to beat both of their Armies out of the Country, and the Engliſh Fleet perſuaded powerfully the Hollanders to remove from before Dunkirk.

The Peace at Prague. The Affairs in Germany were ſomewhat mitigated by the Concluſion of the Peace at Prague; and the Proteſtants were reduced to their Profeſſion as it was ſettled in the Year 1627.

Some fiery Spirits on both ſides, fomented by Cardinal Richlieu, ſought to undermine the Peace, and to reduce all again to a new Quarrel, but the Emperor purſued the Agreement, confirmed the Peace, and forced many to an Obſervance of it.

The Swedes were generally diſcontented with the Peace. The Elector of Saxony offered them a 100000 Rix-Dollars for a Reward, but they refuſed it, and held what they had gotten in Pomerland, and elſewhere; and what they had about Philipsburgh, the Chancellor Oxenſtierne put into the Hands of the French.

A Ship loaden with many rich Spoils of Germany, and Goods of a very great value, belonging to the Chancellor, as himſelf acknowledged to me, was caſt away, and the Goods ſunk in the Sea, within a League of the Coaſt of Sweden.

In November this Year arrived the Prince Elector in England, to ſollicite our King, his Uncle, for his Aſſiſtance to the Reſtoration of his Nephew, to his Dignity, and Patrimony; he was received here with all Ceremonies, and Courteſies, anſwerable to his Quality, and near Alliance, and ſoon after him, his third Brother, Prince Rupert, arrived here alſo.

Hollanders preſent. In December, the Queen was brought to bed of a ſecond Daughter, named Elizabeth, to congratulate her Majeſty's ſafe delivery, the Hollanders ſent hither a ſolemn Ambaſſy, and a noble Preſent.

A huge Piece of Amber-Greaſe, two fair China Baſons, almoſt tranſparent, a curious Clock, and four rare Pieces of Tintinell, and Tytian's painting.

Some ſuppoſed, that they did it, to ingratiate the more with our King, in regard his Fleet was ſo powerful at Sea; and they ſaw him reſolved to maintain his Right, and Dominion there. 11 Car.

In March, the Treaſurer's Staff was given by the King to Dr. William Juxton, Biſhop of London, who was commended to His Majeſty, by the Archbiſhop Laud, his old Friend, and Predeceſſor in the Preſidentſhip of St. John's College in Oxford. He was a Commoner in that College, and ſtudied the Civil Law, and therein took the Degree of Batchelor, and afterwards of Doctor of the Laws. Juxton made Treaſurer.

Yet with his Law he ſtudied likewiſe Divinity, took Orders, and was preſented to the Parſonage of Somerton in Oxfordſhire, where he had a convenient Livelihood, and there he ſometimes reſided, and ſometimes at St. John's College. He was much delighted with hunting, and kept a Pack of good Hounds, and had them ſo well ordered, and hunted, and chiefly by his own Skill and Direction, that they exceeded all other Hounds in England, for the Pleaſure and orderly Hunting of them. He was a Perſon of great Parts and Temper, and had as much command of himſelf, as of his Hounds, he was full of Ingenuity and Meekneſs, not apt to give offence to any, and willing to do good to all.

Letters for Ship-money. The Privy Council wrote Letters to every High Sheriff of England, directing them for the taxing, and levying of the Ship-money; and that with great Care and Equality, much beyond what was obſerved in following Taxes. But the guilding of this illegal Pill, would not cauſe it to be ſwallowed down; but many People, eſpecially of the knowing Gentry, expreſſed great diſcontent at this new Aſſeſſment, and Burthen, as an Impoſition againſt Law, and the Rights of the Subject.

The Plague was this Year in London, but, by the Mercy of God, did not increaſe ſo much as was feared.

'Twas retained by divers of the Country to be of Counſel for them at the Juſtice in Eyre's Seat, appointed to be held for the Foreſt of Whichwood in Oxfordſhire; and to furniſh and enable my ſelf the better to do them ſervice, and to make and defend their ſeveral Claims at the Juſtice Seat, and to prepare for it, I imployed divers of my Friends, and took a great deal of Pains my ſelf in ſtudying the Points of Foreſt Learning, and in ſearching and taking out of Records concerning the ſame, and particularly concerning that Foreſt of Whichwood. I was the more active in this Buſineſs to gain the Reſpect of the Gentlemen, dwelling within and near the Foreſt, who were all highly concerned in it, and I was not unwilling to appear againſt the Deſigns of the Earl of Danby, who ſought to promote his own Intereſt under the King's, as Lieutenant of that Foreſt, and to prejudice the Gentlemen and Free-holders in their Liberties and Privileges which they claimed.

The Earl of Berks whoſe Fortune was lower than his Mind, betook himſelf to ſome new Projects, whereof he became a Countenancer, and Partner; hoping to gain much by them to repair his Eſtate: and had gotten a Patent from the King, for the ſole making of a new kind of Kiln for making of Malt, and laboured to bring the ſame in uſe; he was to have Money of all thoſe who ſet up this new Kiln.

This Year by a Flood near Glucſtade in Holſtein, were drowned ſix thouſand Perſons, and about fifty thouſand Cattle: And by the Plague there died in Leyden in Holland, twenty thouſand Perſons, beſides thoſe that died in the reſt of the Towns of that Country.

Anno 1635. Laud's Viſitation.

The Archbiſhop Laud made his Viſitation, and ſtrictly enjoyned, and expected a Conformity to his Orders; one of them which gave moſt diſtaſte to many, was, That the Communion-Table ſhould be removed in every Church, from the Body of the Church, or Chancel, to the upper Eaſt-end of the Chancel, and the ſide of the Table to be ſet againſt the Wall, Altar-wiſe, with a Rail or Balluſter about it. Which was oppoſed by divers, and the Biſhop of Lincoln wrote a Book called the Holy Table, ſhewing the Practice of the primitive Times, and Arguments againſt this Innovation.

Northumberland Admiral.

The King's Navy of ſixty Men of War, under the Command of the Earl of Northumberland Admiral, ſeized and ſunk divers of the Dutch Buſſes in the Northern Seas, and they fled to our King, craving his Leave by his Grant, to fiſh, and trade with the Engliſh: which the King was ready to indulge them.

Ferdinand the 2d.

Ferdinand the ſecond Emperor, aged and infirm, ſummoned a Diet at Ratisbone, to be held the ſixteenth of September, when his Son Ferdinand the third was elected King of the Romans, and was ſhortly after upon the death of his Father made Emperor.

Hampden refuſes Ship-money.

Mr. John Hampden, my Country-man and Kinſman, a Gentleman of an ancient Family in Buckinghamſhire, and of a great Eſtate and Parts, denied the Payment of Ship-money, as an illegal Tax. He often adviſed in this great Buſineſs with Holborn, Saint John, my ſelf, and others of his Friends and Counſel. Several other Gentlemen refuſed the Payment of this Tax of Ship-money: Whereupon the King was adviſed by the Lord Chief Juſtice Finch, and others, to require the Opinion of his Judges, which he did, ſtating the Caſe in a Letter to them.

After much Solicitation by the chief Juſtice Finch, promiſing Preferment to ſome, and highly threatning others whom he found doubting, as themſelves reported to me, he got from them in anſwer to the King's Letter and Caſe, their Opinions in theſe Words:

Judges Opinion about Ship-money.

We are of Opinion, that when the Good and Safety of the Kingdom in general is concerned, and the whole Kingdom in danger, Your Majeſty may by Writ under the Great Seal of England, command all Your Subjects of this Your Kingdom, at their Charge, to provide and furniſh ſuch number of Ships, with Men, Victuals, and Ammunition, and for ſuch time as Your Majeſty ſhall think fit, for the Defence and Safeguard of the Kingdom, from ſuch Peril and Danger. And that by Law Your Majeſty may compel the doing thereof in caſe of Refuſal, or Refractorineſs. And we are alſo of Opinion, that in ſuch caſe Your Majeſty is the ſole Judge, both of the Dangers, and when, and how the ſame is to be prevented and avoided.

This Opinion was ſigned by Bramſton Finch, Davenport, Denham, Hutton, Jones, Croke, Trever, Vernon, Berkley, Crawley, Weſton.

This Opinion and Subſcription of the Judges, was inrolled in all the Courts of Weſtminſter, and much diſtaſted many Gentlemen of the Country, and of their own Profeſſion, as a thing extrajudicial, unuſual, and of very ill Conſequence in this great Buſineſs, or in any other.

The King upon this Opinion of his Judges, gave order for proceeding againſt Hampden in the Exchequer, where he pleaded, and the King's Council demurring, the Point in Law came to be argued for the King by his Council, and for Hampden by his Council; and afterwards the Judges particularly argued this great Point at the Bench, and all of them (except Hutton and Croke) argued, and gave their Judgments for the King. 12 Car.

The Arguments both at the Bar and Bench, were full of rare and excellent Learning, eſpecially in matter of Record and Hiſtory; but they are too voluminous to be here inſerted.

Judge Croke (of whom I ſpeak knowingly) was reſolved to deliver his Opinion for the King, and to that end had prepared his Argument: Yet a few days before he was to argue, upon Diſcourſe with ſome of his neareſt Relations, and moſt ſerious Thoughts of this Buſineſs, and being heartned by his Lady, who was a very good and pious Woman, and told her Husband upon this Occaſion, That ſhe hoped he would do nothing againſt his Conſcience, for fear of any Danger or Prejudice to him, or his Family; and that ſhe would be contented to ſuffer Want, or any Miſery with him, rather than be an Occaſion for him to do, or ſay any thing againſt his Judgment and Conſcience.

Croke alters his Mind.

Upon theſe and many the like Encouragements, but chiefly upon his better Thoughts, he ſuddenly altered his Purpoſe and Arguments; and when it came to his turn, contrary to Expectation, he argued and declared his Opinion againſt the King.

But Hampden, and many others of Quality and Intereſt in their Countries, were unſatisfied with this Judgment, and continued to the utmoſt of their Power in oppoſition to it; yet could not at that time give any farther Stop or Hinderance to the Proſecution of the Buſineſs of Ship-money, but it remained alta mente repoſtum.

The Heralds ſummoned me to enter my Pedigree in their Office, according to the Order of the Earl Marſhal, which had not been done ſince the death of my Father: I obeyed their Order, and produced to them thirteen Deſcents on the Part of my Father, and fourteen Deſcents on the Part of my Mother, proved by Evidences and other Teſtimony, which were alſo allowed by them, and entred into the Records of their Office.

Arundel ſent to the Emperor.

The Earl of Arundel was ſent Ambaſſador to the new Emperor Ferdinand the third, where he ſtayed and treated ſome Months, about the reſtitution of the King's Nephew, the Prince Elector; but being oppoſed by the Duke of Bavaria, who had gotten poſſeſſion of Part of the Palſegrave's Territories, and by others after their Intereſt; and being diſcontented at the Delays they put upon him in the Treaty at the Diet: The Ambaſſador without taking any leave, or effecting any thing for which he was ſent, returned home in much Diſtaſte and Choler.

I ſpent much Money for the tranſcribing of Records for the Foreſt Buſineſs, and for my private Study.

I received from my kind Friend Mr. Edward Hide, a Letter from London, directed to me at Fawley Court, wherein he drolls, and ſays our beſt News is, that we have good Wine abundantly come over; and the worſt, that the Plague is in Town, and no Judges die; the old obſerv'd Baron out of meer Frowardneſs reſolving to live, for your Biſhops I know no new Addition, the one being long ſince Dean of the Chapel, the other not mentioned for any Preferment.

I found out a Conformation by the Means of Mr. Collet, of a Perambulation made in the latter end of Edw. III.

Mr. Fallconbridge abſtracted for me divers Notes out of the Records remaining in the Exchequer. The Buſineſs of the Foreſt of Whichwood came on, and the Earl of Holland ſat as Juſtice in Eyre.

Anno 1637. 13 Car.

Anno 1637.

The Sickneſs began to increaſe in London, which cauſed many to poſt into the Country, and kept others from coming to Town; and it was thought fit to adjourn Part of the Term.

Burton. Three Delinquents were ſentenced in the Star-Chamber, Mr. Burton a Divine, for writing and printing two ſmart and ſharp Tracts againſt Epiſcopacy.

Baſtwick. Doctor Baſtwick, a Phyſician, for writing Books reproachful againſt the Prelates, particularly againſt Archbiſhop Laud, and Biſhop Juxton. And in his Anſwer to the Information againſt him in the Star-Chamber, he hath this Paſſage;

That the Prelates are Invaders of the King's Prerogative Royal, Contemners and Deſpiſers of the holy Scriptures, Advancers of Popery, Superſtition, Idolatry, and Rrophaneneſs: Alſo they abuſe the King's Authority, to the Oppreſſion of his loyaleſt Subjects, and therein exerciſe great Cruelty, Tyranny, and Injuſtice; and in execution of thoſe impious Performances, they ſhew neither wit, honeſty, nor temperance. Nor are they either Servants of God, or of the King, but of the Devil, being Enemies of God and the King, and of every living thing that is good. All which the ſaid Dr. Baſtwick is ready to maintain, &c.

None of the Doctor's Friends could prevail with him to expunge this, and other the like Paſſages out of his Anſwer.

Prynn. The third Defendant was Mr. Prynn of Lincolns-Inn, a Barriſter at Law, for writing a Book ſcandalous to the King and Church, who had been there cenſured before, and was now fined five thouſand Pounds, to loſe the remainder of his Ears on the Pillory, to be ſtigmatized on both Cheeks with an S. for Schiſmatick, and to be perpetually impriſoned in Caernarvan Caſtle.

Burton and Baſtwick were fined five thouſand Pounds apiece, to loſe their Ears in the Pillory, and to be impriſoned, the one in Launceſton Caſtle, and the other in Lancaſter Caſtle.

I received this Letter from Mr. Hide.

To my moſt honoured Friend Bulſtrode Whitelocke Eſq; at his Houſe at Fawley-Court.

My Dear,

I Am glad you proſper ſo happily in Iſſue Male, God ſend the good Woman well again, which my Wife prays for, as an encouragement for her Journey, which ſhe ſhall ſhortly be ready for; you may depend on a Doe on Monday, God willing, although this Weather forbids you to look for a fat one. My Pen is deep in a Star-Chamber Bill, and therefore I have only the Leiſure and the Manners to tell you, I am very proud that you are a Friend to

Your moſt affectionate Servant,

Prince Elector defeated. The Prince Elector, and his Brother Prince Rupert, departed into Holland, and having gotten together a ſmall Army, marched into Weſtphalia, and beſieged Limgea; but was fought with by the Emperor's General Halisfield, his Army diſcomfited, two thouſand of them ſlain, and his Brother Prince Rupert, and the Lord Craven taken Priſoners, himſelf hardly eſcaping by flight.

Sentence againſt Biſhop of Lincoln. The Biſhop of Lincoln was brought to a Sentence in the Star-Chamber, for diſloyal Words, charged to be ſpoken by him againſt the King, and for ſuborning Witneſſes to conceal a Truth, and to ſtifle a Crime. He was at laſt fined ten thouſand Pounds, committed to the Tower, during Pleaſure, ſuſpended ab Officio & Beneficio, and referred to the High Commiſſion Court, for that which concerned their Juriſdiction. 13 Car.

Osbaldſton. Mr. Osbaldſton was alſo heavily ſentenced in the Star-Chamber, upon the Buſineſs of the Biſhop of Lincoln; but he got out of the way, leaving a Paper in his Study, with this Inſcription, That Lambert Osbaldſton was gone beyond Canterbury.

But Canterbury after this Sentence ſends this Warrant to the King's Solicitor.

Laud's Warrant. Mr. Solicitor, It is his Majeſty's Pleaſure, that you prepare a Commiſſion to the Prebendaries of the Collegiate Church of Weſtminſter, authorizing them to keep their Audits, and other Capitular Meetings, at their uſual times, to treat and compound with the Tenants for Leaſes, and to paſs the ſame accordingly, chooſe Officers, confirm and execute all other lawful Acts, for the good and benefit of the College, and the ſaid Prebendaries: And to take out the Common, or Chapter Seal, for ſealing ſuch Leaſes and Grants as ſhall be agreed upon by the Sub-dean, and the major part of the Prebendaries; and alſo to paſs all the Premiſes under the ſtile and title of the Dean and Chapter of the Collegiate Church of St. Peter in Weſtminſter, during the ſuſpenſion of the Biſhop of Lincoln, from the Deanry of Weſtminſter: For the doing whereof, this ſhall be your Warrant.

This was held by ſome Lawyers to be a ſtrange Warrant, and theſe Proceedings in the Star-Chamber againſt theſe Perſons, raiſed a deep diſtaſte in the Hearts of many People, which ſome expreſſed by their Murmurings, and gave out Canterbury to be the Author of them; more particularly, againſt Lincoln, upon the private Grudges, and Emulation between theſe two Prelates.

This Letter from Mr. Hide came to me.

SIR,

NExt your Letter, I thank you for your Meſſenger, by whom you enable me to return to you, for I was mourning you had gotten ſo far before-hand with me, while I knew no Conveyance might reach you; your Vicar ſent me your firſt by a Porter, but no Inſtruction to find you out, I will not ſo far leſſen my Devotion to Fawley, to tell you, 'tis fit I breathe the Country Air; indeed this beloved Town is to me all Health, yet I intend nothing more than to viſit you this Lent, and be ſo merry with you, that you ſhall perceive you have much of my Heart in your keeping. The time exactly I dare not promiſe, however it ſhall not be the twenty ninth, for I am in Doctor Moor's Diſpoſal for one Week's Phyſick, which ſhould have been diſpatch'd ere this, but that my Lord Treaſurer's Sickneſs confined him to an Attendance ſolely there, and he would not undertake two Perſons of ſuch Quality together, but he is as dead as you would wiſh, if he recover not again, as he did yeſterday, when he was left by all.

Your Pilot calls for my diſpatch, and will allow me no more time, than to tell you, I wiſh you all the Contents of your own Prayers, and am

Your moſt humble and affectionate Servant,
Edward Hide.

My little Wench deſires you to accept her humble Service, mine to my little Friend.

The

Anno 1637. Troubles in Scotland.

The Troubles and Commotions in Scotland began to ariſe upon this occaſion: King James had deſigned to bring the Kirk of Scotland to a Conformity with the Church of England; and for that purpoſe appointed ſome of his Scotiſh Biſhops to compile a Form of Liturgy, a Book of Common Prayer to be uſed there, which was done, and ſent to him into England for his Approbation; but nothing farther was effected in that Buſineſs by King James.

King Charles his Son, in proſecution of his Father's Deſign, directed Archbiſhop Laud, the Biſhop of Ely, and other Biſhops, to review, and alter as they pleaſed that Service Book, which they did with ſome material Alterations, from that uſed in England: and by the Advice of theſe Biſhops, and others, this new Service-book was ſent into Scotland, with Command to be there read.

Firſt, In the Chapel of the King's Houſe at Edinburgh, the Communion to be adminiſtred in that form, and taken on their Knees, the Biſhop in his Rochet, the Miniſter in his Surplice. The Scotiſh Biſhops liked the matter of the Book, but not the Impoſing of it from our Church upon theirs; nor the different Tranſlation from the Scotiſh Language of ſome of the Pſalms, Epiſtles, and Goſpels, which to ſatisfy them was amended; and the Book proclaimed to be read in all Churches.

On Sunday, July 23. The Dean of Edinburgh began to read the Book in the chief Church of the City; upon which the People in a tumultuous manner filled the Church with uproar, which cauſed the Biſhop of Edinburgh to ſtep up into the Pulpit to appeaſe them, by minding them of the holineſs of the Place.

This inraged the Multitude the more, ſo that the Women and Men threw Cudgels, Stools, and what was in the way of Fury at the Biſhop, to the indangering of his Life.

The Chancellor ſeeing this, called down from the Gallery, the Provoſt, Bailies, and Magiſtrates of the City, then ſitting there, who thruſt the Rabble out of the Church, and made faſt the Doors; ſo the Dean proceeded in his Common Prayer, only he was diſturbed from the outward man, the Multitude without rapping at the Doors, pelting the Windows with Stones, and making hideous noiſes: Nevertheleſs the Service was ended, though not the Peoples Rage, who aſſaulted the Biſhop returning to his Lodging; and in other Churches, the Peoples diſorders were anſwerable.

The Chancellor and Council ſo ordered the Buſineſs for the Afternoon, that the Common Prayer was read without diſturbance, only the Biſhop returning to his Lodging, was rudely treated.

The Magiſtrates of the City ſeemed to diſtaſte theſe tumultuous Actions, and to inquire out the Actors, and by deſire of the City Miniſters, the Magiſtrates drew up an Obligatory Act for Indemnity of their Perſons, and ſettling of their Maintenance.

During Harveſt, Men were at work, and quiet; that being ended, many reſort to Edinburgh, petition the Council, That the Service-book may no farther be preſt upon them, till the King's farther Pleaſure were known.

Proclamations.

The Council fearing Danger, iſſue three Proclamations:

1. To diſſolve their Meeting in relation to Church-matters, and all to repair home.

2. For removing the Seſſion from Edinburgh to Lithgow.

3. For calling in and burning a ſeditious Book, Intituled, A Diſpute againſt the Engliſh Popiſh Ceremonies, obtruded upon the Kirk of Scotland. 13 Car.

Theſe Proclamations increaſed the Flame, and the next Day the Biſhop of Galloway going to the Council-houſe, was followed in the Streets with Railings, and the Houſe beſet with Clamours, and Menaces: The Earl of Traquair going to relieve the Biſhop, became in the ſame condition with him; the Lord Provoſt and City-council were called to raiſe the Siege, but they returned anſwer, That their condition was the ſame, ſurrounded with the Multitude who had forced them for fear of their Lives, to ſign a Paper to adhere to them, in oppoſing the Service-book, and to reſtore Ramſey, Rollock, and Henderſon, ſilenced Miniſters.

The Lord Treaſurer going to the Council-houſe, was thrown down by the Throng, his Hat, Cloak, and white Staff taken from him.

The Lords in this danger ſent for ſome Noblemen and Gentlemen who were diſaffected to the Service-book, to come to their aid, who came, and quietly guarded them to their ſeveral Lodgings.

Then the Council iſſued a Proclamation to repreſs the Diſorders, but little obedience was given to it: The Citizens ſent Commiſſioners to the Council, to have their Miniſters reſtored, and what they had promiſed to be performed.

Scots Petition.

A Petition was ſent to the Council Board, not of the Multitude, but of Noblemen, Barons, Miniſters, Burgeſſes, and Commons, againſt the Liturgy and Canons.

This Petition was ſent to the King, who diſpleaſed at it, gave Inſtructions for adjourning the Term to Sterling, 24 Miles from Edinburgh, to prevent confluences of People, and for publiſhing a Proclamation forbidding ſuch tumultuous Reſorts, upon the higheſt Penalties.

Upon the reading of this Proclamation at Edinburgh, the Earl of Hume, and the Lord Lindſey, and others, cauſed their Proteſtation againſt it to be read, and agreeable thereunto, erected four Tables: 1. Of the Nobility. 2. Of the Gentry. 3. Of the Buroughs. 4. Of the Miniſters: Theſe were to prepare what was to be propounded at the general Table, conſiſting of ſeveral Commiſſioners choſen from the reſt.

The firſt Act of this general Table, was a renewing of the ancient Confeſſion of Faith of that Kirk, and entering into a general Covenant to preſerve the Religion there profeſt, and the King's Perſon.

The Council upon this Combination, ſent an Expreſs by Sir John Hamilton to the King, to advertiſe him thereof. The King obſerved, That in this Covenant, contrary to what was formerly, neither his own, nor his Delegated Authority, was implored: And whereas preceding Bands annext to Confeſſions, were formed in defence of himſelf, his Authority and Perſon: This new Edition hath a Combination againſt all Perſons whatſoever, himſelf not excepted.

The King, though highly offended at theſe Affronts, yet ſtudying how to compoſe the Diſcontents, ſent the Marquiſs of Hamilton his high Commiſſioner into Scotland, for ſettling of the Peace. Hamilton.

He ſtayed many days at Dalkeith, four Miles from Edinburgh, yet none of the Covenanters came to him; but at the ſolicitation of the City, and aſſurance of their quiet Deportment, he came to Edinburgh, and there fell preſently into Communication with the Covenanters.

2. What aſſurance they would give of their returning to due obedience, and renunciation of the Covenant.

Anno 1637.

To the firſt they anſwered, That nothing but a general Aſſembly and a Parliament could give them ſatisfaction.

Covenanters Anſwer.

2. They anſwered, That they diſavowed any Retreat from their Loyalty, and therefore needed no Return towards it.

And for the Covenant, That they would ſooner renounce their Baptiſm than it, and would not endure to hear this Propoſition a ſecond time.

The Covenanters doubled their Guards upon the Caſtle and City, and the Marquiſs for his ſafety, returned to Dalkeith, and ſent to the King for new Inſtructions.

The King's Declaration.

His Majeſty ordered him to publiſh the King's Declaration, Aſſuring that Kingdom of his Conſtancy in the Proteſtant Religion, that he would not farther urge the Practice of the Canons and Service-book, but in a fair and legal way, and had given order for the diſcharge of all Acts of Council concerning them. And that he had taken into conſideration, the Indicting of a general Aſſembly and Parliament, wherein might be agitated what ſhould moſt concern the Peace and welfare of the Kirk and Kingdom. Whereupon he expected that thoſe his Subjects, ſenſible of his gracious Favour, would give Teſtimonial of their future Loyalty, and no farther provoke him to make uſe of that Power, which God had given him, for the reclaiming of diſobedient People. As ſoon as the Proclamation was ended, the Covenanters were ready with a Proteſt againſt it, highly diſtaſted, To have their Actions branded with the Notion of Diſobedience; and declared, that they would never abandon their Covenant, upon ſuch ſuggeſtions: And that they would not wait the King's Conveniency, for calling of an Aſſembly, but if he did not approve of their Proceedings, they would call a general Aſſembly themſelves.

Covenanters proteſt.

The Marquiſs finding them thus obſtinate, told them, That the Stock of his Inſtructions was ſpent, and that he muſt reſort to England for a freſh Supply.

Thereupon the Covenanters acquainted him, That they expected his Majeſty's Anſwer, and his Return upon the Fifth of Auguſt, next at fartheſt, and promiſed in the mean time to continue in a peaceable condition, and not to act any thing till his Return.

The Marquiſs came to England to the King, making known to him the ſtate of his Affairs in Scotland, and was diſpatched away, with new Inſtructions, ſo as by the time prefixed, he returned to Scotland.

By the Fifth of Auguſt the Marquiſs returned to Scotland, and there found a Rumour, That he approved the Covenant, which occaſioned him for his Vindication, to call in the Lords of the Council, and others of the Nobility, to be his Compurgators. Then he falls to confer with the Covenanters about indicting of the Aſſembly, demanding of what Members it ſhould conſiſt, and of what Matters they ſhould treat.

At which the Covenanters in great paſſion anſwered, That theſe Propoſals were deſtructive to their Liberties, and a prelimitation of that Aſſembly, who ought to be free, and to be judge both of their own Members, and the Matters of their Cognizance.

This cauſed the Commiſſioner to declare his Inſtructions to indict an Aſſembly upon the Conceſſion of ten Articles. To which the Covenanters would not aſſent, but appealed to the General Aſſembly; where they ſaid thoſe matters were properly to be decided.

Upon this Refuſal, the Commiſſioner reſolved to go again for England, and the Covenanters raiſed a rumour, That he had neither Power from the King, nor Inclination to give the People ſatisfaction, which ſeemed ſo to incenſe him, that he contracted his former Propoſals into two.

1. That no Laicks, nor any but Miniſters of the Presbyteries ſhould have Votes in the chooſing of Miniſters for the General Aſſembly. 14 Car. Spottiſwood's Propoſals.

2. That things Eccleſiaſtical ſhould be left to be determined by the Aſſembly, and things ſettled by Acts of Parliament, to the Parliament.

This being granted, he would preſently indict a General Aſſembly; and promiſed upon his honour, immediately after to call a Parliament.

The Covenanters were ſo diſtaſted at theſe Propoſals, that they preſently gave order for a General Aſſembly; but upon ſecond thoughts, they held fit to forbear, till the Commiſſioner ſhould return from the King, with a more pleaſing Anſwer, for which they gave him time till the 21ſt of September next, promiſing in the Interim not to proceed to Election.

The Commiſſioner poſted to the King, who adviſing with his Privy Council, and purſuing the advice of his Council in Scotland, reſolved on a way, which he thought would take away all Diſcontents there, and ſent back the Commiſſioner with ample Inſtructions for that purpoſe. Who returning within the time limited, found that the Covenanters had ordered an Election to be on the next Day the 22d of September, yet took no notice thereof, but according to his inſtructions, aſſembled the Council, and delivered to them a Letter from the King, acquainting them with what courſe he meant to purſue for the Benefit of the Kirk and State. Then he appointed the King's Declaration to be read, wherein he nulled the Service-book, the Book of Canons, The high Commiſſion, diſcharged the preſſing of the 5 Articles of Perth, ordered that all Perſons whatſoever, Eccleſiaſtical or Civil, ſhould be liable to cenſure of Parliament, and General Aſſembly; That no other Oath be adminiſtred to Miniſters at their entry, but what was contained in the Act of Parliament; That the ancient Confeſſion of Faith, and Band thereunto annexed, ſhould be ſubſcribed, and renewed, as it was in his Father's time. That a General Aſſembly be holden at Glaſgow Nov 21ſt and a Parliament at Edinburgh the 15th of May next, wherein he pardoned all bygone Offences, and indicted a General Faſt. Declaration.

After this Declaration publiſhed, the Confeſſion of Faith was read, and ſubſcribed by the Marquiſs, and the Council. Then a Proclamation for the General Aſſembly, and another for the Parliament. Then an Act of the Council requiring a general Subſcription of the Confeſſion of Faith, and a Commiſſion to diverſe for taking the Subſcription.

The Covenanters brought up the Rear with a Proteſt, moved the People to conſider with whom they had to deal, decried the new Subſcription to the Confeſſion of Faith, and excepted againſt the Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, as not to have any Votes in the Aſſembly. Covenanters proteſt.

Then they elect Commiſſioners for the Aſſembly; and order at their Table, That every Pariſh ſhould ſend to the Presbytery one Layman, whom they ſtiled a Ruling Elder, to have equal Vote with the Miniſter.

They moved the Commiſſioner for his Warrant of Citation againſt the Archbiſhops, and Biſhops, to appear at the Aſſembly as Delinquents, which he refuſing, they fram'd a Bill againſt them, for many Miſdemeanours, which was preferred to the Presbytery at Edinburgh againſt them, and they warned them to compeer at the General Aſſembly at Glaſcow.

The Day of the Aſſembly, the Marquiſs's Commiſſion was read, and the next day a Declaration, and Proteſtation was preſented to the Commiſſioner, Anno 1638. Commiſſioner, in the name of the Archbiſhops, and Biſhops againſt the Aſſembly; and containing a Nullity of it. This was denied to be read, againſt which refuſal, the Commiſſioner entred a Proteſtation, and took Inſtruments thereupon.

In the debate of Elections, they left no Man ſtanding as a Commiſſioner, who was not fully of their Mind; but the admiſſion of Lay Elders paſt not without an high conteſt.

Many Places proteſted againſt the Legality of their Seſſion, and the King having nominated ſix Lords of his Privy Council to be Aſſeſſors to his Commiſſioner in that Aſſembly, they refuſed to entertain them, or allow their ſuffrage, affirming that If the King himſelf were preſent, he ſhould have but one Vote, and that no negative one.

The Commiſſioner ſeeing no good likely to be done, by continuing the Aſſembly, and upon conſultation, the Council adviſing to diſſolve it, he went thither, and cauſed a Paper to be read, which was a Decleration, the ſame in effect with the Proclamation, diſcharging the Service Book, Book of Canons, &c.

After the Reading of it, the Commiſſioner ſigned it, and required it to be entred in the Books of the Aſſembly; provided that the regiſtring thereof be no approbation of the Lawfulneſs of the Aſſembly; and proteſted that whatſoever ſhould be done, or ſaid in it, ſhould not be obliging or reputed as an Act of a General Aſſembly.

The Commiſſioner aſſembled the Council, to draw up a Proclamation, for diſſolving the Aſſembly, which, being agreed on, was ſubſcribed by all, but the Earl of Argyle, who now began to ſhew himſelf for the Covenanters Party.

Argyle.

The publiſhing of the Proclamation was encountred with a Proteſtation of the Covenanters, That it was lawful for them to continue the Aſſembly and that they would ſtill adhere to all their former Proteſtations. In purſuance hereof, they preſently declared ſix former General Aſſemblies (which they thought would be againſt them) to be null; then they deprived all the Biſhops, and ſome they excommunicated, and ſoon after they aboliſhed Epiſcopacy it ſelf, as inconſiſtent with the Laws of that Church.

Covenanters prepare for War,

The Commiſſioner being returned in diſcontent for England; the Covenanters began to levy Souldiers, to impoſe Taxes, to raiſe Fortifications, to block up ſome, and ſeize others of the King's Caſtles, and to prepare for War.

This was the Fountain from whence our enſuing troubles did ſpring; and therefore may deſerve the larger Relation; and tend the more to the full knowledge and underſtanding of our following publick Story.

Calvin.

It was now 100 Years, ſince Calvin firſt ſet his foot into Geneva, from whence the Biſhop being expelled, it was neceſſary to inſtitute ſome other Eccleſiaſtical Government. Calvin being of great credit, and eſteem in that City, the framing of this new Government was committed to his care; he obſerving the civil State there to be Democratical, he thought it muſt beſt ſuit therewith, and with the liking of the People, to frame the Eccleſiaſtical Government agreeable thereunto. He therefore formed a Conſiſtory of Elders, a great part whereof were Laymen, and they were to manage all Matters Eccleſiaſtical. This pleaſed the People of Geneva, and ſome intituled it to a Jus Divinum, and it found good reception in the Gallican and Belgick Churches, where it was generally ſettled.

The next deſign was to plant it in Britain, for which end Beza writes to Queen Elizabeth recommending this Form to her, as the only thing to be deſired in England's Reformation; the Queen was loth to proſcribe Epiſcopacy, and to entertain this new model of Presbytery, and therefore gave Beza his ſaying, but not his deſires; and ſhortly after, ſhe, and the Parliament (whereof ſome Members inclined to this way) were admoniſhed in ſeveral Treatiſes written and dedicated to them, to aboliſh Epiſcopacy as Antichriſtian. 14 Car.

But the Queen, and the Parliament ſtood fixed, and could not be wrought to any unſettlement of the ancient Diſcipline by Epiſcopacy.

In Scotland the new Form proſpered better, for there, about the Year 1560, the Earl of Murray, Prior of St. Andrew's the Queen's baſe Brother, with his Party Knox, Buchanan, and others gave ſuch a ſhock to Popery, as made every thing (and by conſequence Epiſcopacy) which ſtood near it, to reel.

Yet in 20 Years it could not be ſupplanted, but it was gained upon by Degrees, firſt in an Aſſemby 1580. It was ordered, that all Biſhops, on pain of Excommunication, ſhould reſign up their Offices, and about three Years after, the Parliament (the King being a Minor) annext their Temporalities to the Crown of Scotland.

This was ſuppoſed to be inſtigated from ſome of the Nobility, and Miniſters from England; Whereupon the then Archbiſhop Whitgift, by the Queen's Command, contrived three Articles in the late Canons, to which all were to ſubſcribe at their taking of Holy Orders. Whitgift's Articles.

1. Acknowledging the Supremacy of the Queen.

2. Profeſſing conformity to the Book of Common Prayer, and approbation of the Book of Ordering of Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons.

3. Aſſenting to the 39 Articles of the Church of England. In Scotland the Hierarchy began ſomewhat to revive again, by their Parliaments ratifying the Clergy, as the third Eſtate, 1584.

Epiſcopacy reſtored.

But the other Party 1592, prevailed with that State, to ratify their Diſcipline. Thus Epiſcopacy, and Presbytery took their turns of Government, for about 30 Years.

But about the Year 1598, King James cauſed the Prelates in Scotland to be reſtored to their Votes in Parliament, and in his Book Baſilicon Doron, he expreſſed no great affection to the Conſiſtorian Government.

1603. At his Acceſſion to the Crown of England, he was urged by Petition of 1000 Miniſters againſt Epiſcopacy, but he ſlighted it; and by ſeveral Acts of Parliament in Scotland, he reſcinded what had been formerly enacted there, to the prejudice of Epiſcopacy, and from that time, till theſe Commotions this Year in Scotland, the Presbyters did not appear in oppoſition.

The Queen Mother in England.

In October, Mary de Medices the Queen Mother of France came into England, the People were generally diſcontented at her coming, and at her Followers; which ſome obſerved to be the Sword, or Peſtilence; and that her reſtleſs Spirit imbroiled all where ſhe came.

That her combining with Monſieur the Duke of Orleans, and the ill Succeſs of that Enterpize, made France too hot for her, and drove her to Bruſſells, where the Cardinal Infanta careſſed her a while; but there ſhe was purſued with ſuch Curſes, that for fear of Violence to her Perſon, ſhe quitted that Country, and betook herſelf to the Protection of the Prince of Orange; where ſhe ſtay'd not long, but receiving an invitation from the Queen her Daughter ſhe repaired into England.

The

Anno 1638.

Preparations for War with the Scots.

The King perceiving that the Scots intended nothing but War, thought not fit to yield them the ſtart, but by advice of the Archbiſhop Laud, and others, he haſtened his Levies of Men and Money; and becauſe this was the Biſhops War, it was held fit that they ſhould contribute largely towards the preſervation of their own Hierarchy.

Accordingly Orders were iſſued from the Council to the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, requiring them to ſend forth Directions to all the Biſhops within their Provinces, to aſſemble the Clergy of their Dioceſſes, and to invite them to a liberal Aid.

With theirs, and the voluntary Contributions of divers of the Nobility and Gentry, the King had gotten together a conſiderable Power, whereof the Earl of Arundel was made General.

Arundel General.

Declaration.

The King ſets forth a Declaration, to inform his Subjects, of the ſeditious practices of ſome in Scotland, ſeeking the overthrow of Regal power, under falſe pretext of Religion. Diſcovers their traiterous Intentions by the multitudes of their Pamphlets and Libels, againſt Regal authority; and by their letters to private perſons, inciting them againſt the King; by their Covenanters private meetings in London, and other places of the Kingdom; by their contempts, and proteſts againſt his commands; by rejecting his Covenant, and taking up a Covenant of their own, of conſpiracy againſt him, and by their hoſtile preparations of Arms.

He remonſtrates all the former paſſages of his Grace, Clemency and Indulgence towards them; and their undutiful Returns, and their Inſolences, by erecting a Print, raiſing Taxes, blocking up, and beſieging his Caſtles, taxing his Subjects, ſlighting his Counſellors, and ſetting up of Tables. He takes God to witneſs he is conſtrained by theſe their Treaſons, to take arms for the ſafety of that and this Kingdom.

He reſolves to maintain Epiſcopacy there, and refers to a larger Declaration coming forth.

The Covenanters Anſwer.

To this the Covenanters anſwer by theirs at Edinburgh, That though the ſecrets of God's way cannot be ſounded, yet conſidering his providence, in their perſonal affairs, the Lord is about ſome great work on Earth, for the Cup of affliction propined to other reformed Kirks, is now preſented to them, although inſtead of a gracious return of their humble petitions, from time to time, the return is a late Declaration, libelled againſt them, though the gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt their cauſe, and the Kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt now in Queſtion; which Declaration proceeds from the unchriſtian Prelates, and their Party, they mention their long ſuffering of the Prelates inſolency, againſt their Miniſtry, Purity of Doctrine, their Reformation, fearing Popery to be introduced.

And for doing any harm to England, curſed be their breaſts, if they harbour any ſuch thought; implore the good opinion of their well affected Brethren in England, and to conclude their War defenſive, they cite the Law natural, and civil; That it is enough for defence, that the offer of offence, or juſt fear of offence, go before; as we profeſs it to be our caſe at this preſent, even the defence of God, and his Religion.

Their Remonſtrances, Declarations and Pamphlets, were diſperſed, and their Emiſſaries and Agents inſinuated into the company of all, who were any way diſcontented, or galled at the Proceedings of the State of England.

The Gentlemen who had been impriſoned for the Loan, or diſtrained for the Ship-money, or otherwiſe diſobliged, had applications made to them from the Covenanters; and ſecretly favoured, and aſſiſted their deſigns, ſo did many others, eſpecially thoſe inclined to the Presbyterian Government; or whom the publick Proceedings had anywiſe diſtaſted. 14 Car.

I wanted not Solicitations on the behalf of the Covenanters, but I perſuaded my Friends not to foment theſe growing publick Differences, nor to be any means of incouraging a foreign Nation, proud and ſubtle againſt our natural Prince, and feared great and evil Conſequences thereof.

Anno 1639. 15 Car.

The King's Army being in readineſs, the Earl of Arundel their General, the Earl of Eſſex Lieutenant General, the Earl of Holland General of the Horſe; the Navy ſtored with Corn and Ammunition, was intruſted under the Command of the Marqueſs of Hamilton, their Admiral.

He ſailed to the Firth in Edinburgh, and there anchored, loitering for the King: He received a Viſit from his Mother, a rigid Covenanter, which cauſed the reſt to interpret, That the Son of ſuch a Mother would do them no harm.

The King's Army were to rendevouze at York, and their March thither in ſeveral Companies, many Inſolencies, Robberies, and Murthers were committed by the Soldiers, in the Countries where they paſſed, to the farther diſcontent of a great number of the King's faithful Subjects.

The King at York revokes ſeveral Projects and Monopolies.

At York the King with his Council revokes and makes null a great number of unlawful Grants and Projects, which he had formerly paſſed, to the grievance of his People. In moſt whereof the Marqueſs, and the Scots had a hand and ſhare.

The Earl of Holland General of the Horſe, had gallantly furniſhed himſelf with Horſes, and all other neceſſaries.

The King's Army as gallant as ever attended any of his Predeceſſors in Scotland, marched to Berwick, in gaze of the Enemy, and there was only an Interview of each Army, but no fighting.

By the way the King gave leave to the Scots, to apply themſelves for Mercy, by Capitulation of the Earls of Roxburgh and Traquair; and they were to meet him at York, where one of them was committed, for tampering with ſome Engliſh Lords. And Traquair was confined at Newcaſtle; but both of them were ſoon releaſed, and ſent home, after they had done ſome ſecret Buſineſs, tending to the betraying of their King to their Companions, and provided for Intelligence.

After this, the Courage of the Engliſh Lords ſeemed to be cooler than before, and the Scots advanced; the Earl of Holland, with his Horſe Brigade, obſerved only their Motion, and ſo retreated; and the Engliſh Foot retired more haſtily.

The Engliſh haſten to the Overtures, tending to Pacification; and perſuade the King not to enter Scotland by way of Invaſion, which would irritate them the more, but to incamp on Engliſh Ground.

Articles of Pacification.

The Scots Commiſſioners ſent for the Pacification, fall down at the King's Feet, humbly profeſs their Loyalty and Obedience, and deſiring only the Enjoyment of their Religion and Liberties.

After ſome Treaty by Commiſſioners on both Parts, Articles of Pacification were concluded to this effect.

1. The Forces of Scotland to be disbanded within twenty four hours after the Agreement.

2. The King's Caſtles, Ammunition, &c. to be delivered up.

4. All

Anno 1639.

4. All Perſons, Ships, and Goods detained by the King, to be reſtored.

5. No Meetings, Treaties, or Conſultations to be by the Scots, but ſuch as are warranted by Act of Parliament.

6. All Fortifications to ceaſe, and to be remitted to the King's Pleaſure.

7. To reſtore to every Man their Liberties, Lands, Houſes, Goods and Means.

Theſe Articles were ſigned by the Scots Commiſſioners, and a preſent Performance of them, on their part, promiſed, and expected.

The Scots publiſhed a Paper, very ſeditious and againſt the Treaty, which was burned by the hand of the Hangman.

The King juſtly performed the Articles on his Part; but the Scots kept part of their Forces in Body, and all their Officers in pay.

The King informed of this, was highly diſpleaſed; but unwilling to do any thing to the Interruption of the Pacification, and what was agreed upon by his Commiſſioner, the Marqueſs of Hamilton, which his Majeſty had confirmed.

The Covenanters perform not.

The Covenanters keep up their Fortification, at Leith, and their Meetings, and Councils, and inforce Subſcription to the late Aſſembly at Glaſgow, contrary to the King's Declaration, they brand thoſe who had taken Arms for the King, as Incendiaries, and Traitors, and null all the Acts of the College of Juſtice.

Matters being in this doubtful poſture, the King had little mind to ſee himſelf affronted; and thought that theſe Diſtempers might be better born, and ſooner quieted at a diſtance. Therefore towards the latter end of July he returns to England.

This Year was the great and ſtrange Eruption of fire, near the Ferrara Iſlands, with a horrible noiſe, and carrying a huge quantity of Earth with it, whereby became a new Iſland, and continuing in burning.

The King being returned to London, with his Pacification, the ſame was not well reliſhed by many of his Subjects; who held it diſhonourable to him, and to this Nation, eſpecially having ſo brave an Army with him, far exceeding the Covenanters Forces, both in Horſe and Foot; by whom he might have conſtrained them to reaſon; but thoſe who inclined to Presbytery, or were diſcontented at ſome publick Actions, were the better pleaſed with this Pacification.

Aſſembly at Edinburgh.

Auguſt 6. According to the King's Direction, the general Aſſembly ſat at Edinburgh; who aboliſhed Epiſcopacy, the 5 Articles of Perth, the high Commiſſion, the Liturgy, and the Book of Canons, all this was aſſented to by the Earl of Traquair, the King's new Commiſſioner. The Marqueſs of Hamilton having gotten himſelf out of this troubleſome Employment.

Parliament.

The Aſſembly being riſen, the Parliament ſat, and highly debated about the Choice of the Lords of the Articles, in regard the Biſhops were aboliſhed.

Lords of the Articles.

The ancient Courſe was that the King firſt named eight Biſhops, they choſe eight Noblemen, who choſe ſo many Barons, and they the like number of Burgeſſes, theſe thirty two, with eight Officers of the Crown, made up forty, who were to conſider upon ſuch Articles, as were to be brought to Parliament, and this Committee were called Lords of the Articles.

The Commiſſioner demanded, That the King, inſtead of the eight Biſhops, whom he uſed to name, might now in their place name eight Noblemen, which for this time was conſented to; but voted, That for the future every State ſhould chooſe their own Commiſſioners. 15 Car.

Then they debated about conſtituting the third Eſtate, and what to be brought in, in lieu of the Biſhops. The Commiſſioner urged for the King to have 14 Laicks of ſuch as were called Abbots, and Priors, to repreſent the third Eſtate; but it was voted, that the third Eſtate ſhould be compleated by ſmall Barons, who repreſented the Commonalty.

The Parliament in Scotland prorogu'd.

Then they framed an Act reſciſſory touching the Exchequer Judicatory, Proxies, and Ward-Lands, to the diſpleaſure of the King; who apprehending them to endeavour a new form of Government, and to eclipſe his Regal Power, order'd his Commiſſioner to prorogue them.

Their Declaration.

Which being ſignified to the Parliament, they made a Declaration, That this Prorogation was of no force in Law, being without conſent of the Parliament; that they might juſtify their continuance of ſitting, but in regard to his Majeſty, they would only at preſent make a Remonſtrance to him of the Reaſons of their Propoſitions, and Proceedings; after which, if their Enemies ſhould prevail by falſe Suggeſtions, that then it ſhould not be to them an imputation, that they were conſtrain'd to take ſuch courſe as might beſt ſecure the Kirk and Kingdom from the extremity of Confuſion and Miſery.

Their Deputies, the Earl of Dumferling, and the Lord Loudon came to the King with this Remonſtrance, and there was come the Earl of Traquair, the King's Commiſſioner; a Committee of the Council heard both Parts, and many paſſionate Expreſſions and Recriminations between them. The Deputies juſtified the Acts of the Aſſembly and Parliament, and deſired they might be ratified; the which the Committee thought not fit to be done, as leſſening the Sovereign Authority, and that there was no way but by force to reduce the Covenanters.

The Scots had delivered a Paper to ſome of the Engliſh Lords, entituled, ſome Conditions of His Majeſty's Treaty with His Subjects of Scotland before the Engliſh Nobility.

The Privy Council judging this Paper to be falſe and ſcandalous to his Majeſty and the late Pacification, were ſuitors to His Majeſty that it might be burnt by the hand of the Hangman, and all Copies of it to be brought in, for which a Proclamation was iſſued.

Spaniſh Fleet beaten by the Dutch.

The Spaniſh Fleet of about 70 Sail, bound for Dunkirk with Recruits of Men and Money, met with ſome of the Holland Fleet, and ſank two of them, the reſt made to Dunkirk, where the Holland Admiral lay; who came forth with his Fleet; and joining together betwixt Dover and Calais, attacked the Spaniſh Fleet, took two of their Gallions, ſunk another, and ſhatter'd the reſt, though but 25 Sail, and the Spaniards 60; and having forced them upon the Engliſh Coaſt near Dover, the Dutch fell off to Sea, not willing to attempt any thing againſt the Spaniard within the Dominions of the King of England.

The Spaniſh Reſident in London importuned the King to keep off the Hollanders for two Tides, the Dutch Ambaſſador made application to him againſt the Spaniards; the King in Amity with both, reſolved to ſtand neuter, and forbids His Subjects to tranſport any of the Spaniards to Dunkirk; but their Admiral by night conveyed away 14 Dunkirk Ships, and 4000 Men in them. The King ſent the Earl of Arundel on board the Spaniſh Admiral Don Antonio D' Oquendo, to deſire him to retreat upon the next fair Wind, becauſe he would not have any Engagement upon His Seas; but the Wind continued long contrary, and the Dutch had great

At length, Van Trump, the Dutch Admiral engaged them, and by Cannon and Fire-ſhips forced them to cut their Cables, and of 53 Spaniſh Ships, 23 ran on ſhore and ſtranded in the Downs; of which three were burnt, two ſunk, and two periſhed on the Shore; the reſt were manned by the Engliſh to ſave them from the Dutch.

With the other 30 Ships Don Oquendo put to Sea, where in a Fog the Dutch again engaged them, fired the Admiral of Portugal, took 11 of their Ships, three were loſt upon the Coaſt of France, one near Dover, five ſunk in the Fight, and only 10 eſcaped with their Admiral Oquendo into Dunkirk.

This Armado was believed by many to have been deſigned for an Invaſion of England; and many Diſcourſes pro and con were vented about it.

The Prince Elector came into England by advice of the Prince of Orange, to ſolicit his Uncle to procure him the Command of the Army of Duke Bernard who was lately dead; the King deſired the French Ambaſſador to move it to his Maſter, who willingly undertook it, and that Cardinal Richlieu would be ready to further it.

In the mean time the Prince by ill Advice paſſed through France in diſguiſe to go towards the Swediſh Army, but the King's Fleet in the Downs ſaluting him by the way, and his own Ship diſcharging a Volley at his landing at Boulogne, and by other means he was diſcover'd; and denying himſelf upon Examination, he was ſecured by a Guard; and the King of France took this Paſſage ill from him, and he was a great while kept in the nature of a Priſoner.

Prince Elector made Priſoner in France.

The Scots Commiſſioners returned home to Edinburgh the ſame Night the 19th of November, that a great part of the Caſtle-Wall fell down, with the Cannons mounted, which ſome of the Covenanters ſuppoſed to be done by way of treachery to them, and oppoſed the reedifying of it by the King's Command, not permitting Materials to be brought to repair it. Whereat the King was highly offended, and concluded upon force to bring them to Obedience; for which end he choſe a ſelect number of his Council into the Cabinet of the Scotiſh Affairs.

Some gave out that this was done by the Archbiſhop Laud's Advice, and to keep out Pembroke, Salisbury, Holland, and others, late Commiſſioners in the Pacification, whom the Archbiſhop is ſaid to call The hunting Lords, but Hamilton was kept in; at laſt their number was brought to three only, the Archbiſhop, Strafford Lieutenant of Ireland, and Hamilton.

This Junto met the 5th of December, where the King diſcourſed of the preſent Evils and Neceſſity of ſudden preventing the growth of them, before it ſhould be beyond Remedy; which he declared in his Judgment ought to be by the aſſiſtance and conſent of a Parliament in England.

Strafford acknowledged it the beſt means, and highly approved and magnified the King's Reſolution herein: The Archbiſhop was ſaid to agree therein, and Strafford had the Honour of the Peoples good Opinion for promoting this Reſolution.

A Parliament appointed.

A Parliament was likewiſe to be called in Ireland, and Strafford to go thither, and return back again to the Parliament here, which was appointed to meet the 13th of April following.

In the mean time, (and it was a ſtrange time for ſuch a Buſineſs ſo near the ſitting of a Parliament) the King tells his Lords, That it will be long ere the Parliament meet, and Subſidies granted by them, will be long in levying. In the Interim, his Affairs will ſuffer, without ſome ſpeedy Courſe for Supplies. Car. 15

Hereupon the Lords told him, they would engage their own Credits: Strafford begins, and ſubſcribes for twenty thouſand Pounds, Richmond the like; Hamilton excuſeth himſelf for Poverty: moſt of the reſt ſubſcribed, and ſome few refuſed. The Judges and Officers of Courts of Juſtice, Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal, were aſſeſſed by the Council, according to the Quality and Profit of their Places. Subſcriptions.

The Queen employed Sir Kenelm Digby and Mr. Walter Mountague to labour the Papiſts for a liberal Contribution to the King, which they gained; and thereupon ſome ſtiled the Forces raiſed, The Popiſh Army.

The News of a Parliament to be called, raiſed the Expectations of many for good, and did ſet divers on labouring to get themſelves to be choſen Parliament-men, and the Courtiers to get their Friends choſen.

The beginning of January died the Lord Coventry, who had been Keeper of the great Seal above fifteen years: He raiſed a great Fortune and Barony for his Poſterity, was of no tranſcendent Parts or Fame, but as ſome gave out, He died in a ſeaſonable time. Coventry dies.

The Scots Covenanters ſent new Commiſſioners to the King; the Earl of Dumferling, the Lord Loudon, Sir William Douglas, and Mr. Berkley; the two laſt not mentioned in the Commiſſion. The Lords only authorized to plead Integrity and demonſtrate their Fidelity; but not impower'd to propoſe any Particulars towards a Mediation to the King's Satisfaction. Commiſſioners from Scotland.

They had great Reſort to them, and many ſecret Counſels held with them by the diſcontented Engliſh, chiefly by thoſe who favoured Presbytery, and were no Friends to Biſhops, or had ſuffer'd in the late Cenſures in the Star-Chamber, Exchequer, High Commiſſion and other Judicatories.

Thoſe alſo who inclined to a Republick, had much Correſpondence with them; and they courted all, fomented every Diſcontent, and made large and religious Promiſes of future happy times.

The Earls of Eſſex, Bedford, Holland, the Lord Say, Hampden, Pym, and divers other Lords and Gentlemen of great Intereſt and Quality were deep in with them.

The Covenanters in this time impriſon divers Lords and others, affected to the King's Service.

They procure from the Hollanders divers Officers, Scots and others, with liberty to keep their Commands there; and great Store of Arms and Ammunition upon truſt: but thoſe Officers in the Hollanders Pay, who came over to ſerve the King, were there caſhier'd; the King would ſay of them both, That they were loſt by Favours, and won by Puniſhment.

The Covenanters proclaim their Diſcontents, and implore Aid from the French King, by a Letter under the Hands of many of their principal Actors, which they the leſs doubted, upon Confidence of Cardinal Richlieu, and Con the Pope's Nuntio.

The Original Letter hapned to be brought to our King, and it being found to be the Character of the Lord Loudon, he was (though a Commiſſioner from the Covenanters) committed to the Tower. Loudon ſent to the Tower.

It was ſaid, they were encouraged to take Arms from Cardinal Richlieu, by his Chaplain Chamberlain, a Scot, whom he ſent to them; and by Letters which Hepburn, a Page to his Eminence, brought to divers here, and in Scotland.

They ſeized upon Edinburgh, Stirling, and Dumbarton Caſtles. They are reported likewiſe to offer the Iſles of Orkney and Shetland to the King of Denmark, and to deſire Aſſiſtance from him, and from the Swedes, Hollanders, and Poland.

That the Jeſuits had their Hands and Wits in promoting theſe Troubles, is ſet forth in a long Letter to the Archbiſhop Laud, from a Nobleman of Bohemia, one Andreas ab Habernfield, which Mr. Prynn hath publiſhed in Print, upon truſt (as he uſeth to do) as well as others.

Bagſhaw's Reading.

Mr. Bagſhaw was Reader of the Middle-Temple in the Lent Vacation this year: He was a hard Student, and much inclined to the Nonconformiſts way, and to publiſh ſome of his Learning in favour of them: He choſe for his Statute to read upon 25 Edw. III. ch. 7. In his Speech in the Hall, he ſaid, He had intended to meddle with Prohibitions; but not with Tacitus, to follow Truth too near the Heels, for fear of his Teeth, nor too far off leſt he loſe it; and ſo, neither to offend, nor be offended.

In his firſt Caſe he made one Point, Whether it be a good Act of Parliament which is made without aſſent of the Lords Spiritual?

The Reader argued affirmatively,

1. That they do not ſit in Parliament as Biſhops, but by reaſon of the Baronies annexed to their Biſhopricks, which was done 5 W. I. and all of them have Baronies, except the Biſhop of Man, and he is not called to Parliament.

2. He cited ſome Parliaments to be held without any Biſhops, Kelway's Reports, 7 Hen. VIII. fol. 184. That the Preſence of Biſhops in Parliament is not neceſſary.

3. That divers Acts have been made when the Biſhops were preſent, and did not conſent; as the Act of Conformity, 1 Edw. VI. and of Supremacy, 1 Eliz.

4. That in Parliament, though the Biſhops diſſent in any matter, yet the major part of the Barons agreeing to it, and the Houſe of Commons concurring, it ſhall paſs as an Act; becauſe the Biſhops Votes are overruled by the major Vote of the Barons.

5. That the Biſhops cannot ſit in caſe of Blood in Judicature; but they may ſit to enact Laws, yet not to give aſſent for execution of them, in caſe of any Murder or Blood.

In his ſecond Caſe, he had this Point:

Whether any beneficed Clerk were capable of Temporal Juriſdiction at the time of making that Law?

To this he argued in the Negative:

1. That the firſt Clergymen that ever were made Juſtices of the Peace, or had power in temporal Juriſdiction, were the Biſhops of Durham and York, 34 Ed. III. nine years after this Act; ſo not a Principio, but a Tempore.

2. That before the Statute of Conformity, 1 Ed. VI. the Clergy were not put in Commiſſion for temporal Power; and the reaſon of their being then admitted, was to perſuade the People to Conformity, not to give Judgment againſt them.

3. If in Conſcience (becauſe of their ſpiritual Calling) they hold it not fit for them to meddle in temporal Cauſes, they may refuſe.

In his third Caſe, he had this Point:

Whether a Biſhop, without calling a Synod, have power as a Dioceſan to convict an Heretick?

To this he argued in the Negative:

That although by the bloody Statute of 2 Hen. IV. ſome ſuppoſed Grounds may be raiſed for maintenance of that Authority, yet it is not full: and beſides (which is the main reaſon) the Commons did not aſſent to the making of that Law; for he ſaid, He had ſearched the Records, and found that Act only paſſed by conſent of the Lords ſpiritual and temporal, and the Commons not mentioned therein. 15 Car.

His Arguments being reported at Court, he was commanded not to proceed in his Reading. He repaired to the Lord Keeper with the Heads of his Arguments, who ſaid, It was good Law, but not ſeaſonably deliver'd; and that as he was prohibited by the King, ſo he muſt have his Licence, or elſe he could not proceed in his Reading, and adviſed him to move the Archbiſhop Laud therein.

After the Reader had twice attended at Lambeth, without admittance, the third time he ſpake with the Archbiſhop, who told him, That he had fallen upon an unfit Subject, and in an unſeaſonable time; and that it would ſtick cloſer to him than he was aware of.

The Reader excuſed himſelf, That he had choſen this Statute two years before, and could not alter ſuddenly what he had before framed; that the Buſineſs about Biſhops in another Kingdom did not concern this, and that he had no ill Intentions.

The Archbiſhop anſwered, That perhaps he had done better to have given it quite over at the firſt, than to ſuffer by it as he was like to do.

The Reader replied, That what he had deliver'd was good Law, and he was able to maintain it, and would ſtand by it, and hoped he need not to fear any Man's Power, in regard his Cauſe was lawful and warrantable; but he humbly deſired his Majeſty's leave to finiſh what he had begun.

The Archbiſhop ſaid, His Majeſty had otherwiſe reſolved of it. So the Reader came away, and ſhortly after went out of Town accompany'd with forty or fifty Horſe, and in good Credit with the Gentlemen of that Society.

April 13, 1640. The Parliament met, when the Earl of Strafford was led into the Lords Houſe, by two Noblemen, to take his Place according to his Degree. 16 Car. A Parliament.

He gave an account to the Houſe what he had done in Ireland; having there obtained a Grant of the Parliament of four Subſidies; for the maintenance of ten thouſand Foot, and fifteen hundred Horſe. And it was urged by ſome, as a good Precedent for the Parliament of England.

The Lord Cottington reported in the Lords Houſe, That by the King's Command, he and Secretary Windebank, and the Attorney-General, had examined Lord Loudon in the Tower, touching the Letter of the Covenanters to the French King; That Loudon acknowledged the Hand-writing to be his, and that it was framed before the Pacification at Berwick, to be in readineſs, but was never ſent to that King; and that it was ſuppreſs'd upon the Pacification.

The Lords nevertheleſs thought fit that Loudon ſhould be continued in the Tower, until farther Evidence, either to convict or to clear him.

Glanville, who had engaged to be a better Servant to the King than formerly, was now Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, and very active to promote his Majeſty's Deſires, whereof he gave ſufficient Teſtimony; and of the change of his former Opinion. Glanville Speaker.

A Meſſage was ſent by the King to the Commons, which was for Supplies; repreſenting to them, the intolerable Indignities and Injuries wherewith the Scots had treated him; and he declared, that if the Meſſage from the King.

Anno 1640. Houſe of Commons would aſſiſt him, ſuitable to the Exigency of his Occaſions, he would quit his claim of Ship-money, and give them contentment in all their juſt Demands.

This Meſſage did take much with the Houſe; the Speaker, Sir John Wray, and others, cried it up; yet they firſt inſiſted upon a Security in three Points.

1. For clearing the Subjects Property.
2. For eſtabliſhing Religion.
3. For the Privilege of Parliament.

Many Conferences were between the Lords and Commons, and warm Debates in both Houſes upon the old Queſtion; Which ſhould precede, the King's Supply, or the Subjects Grievances?

In the Debates, Strafford was magnified for being a chief Inſtrument to bring on this Parliament; at length, the Lords, after a ſtrong Diviſion, voted for the King, and the Houſe of Commons for the Subjects.

But it was not long ere this Difference was unhappily decided; Secretary Vane, who by the King's appointment, was to make known the Particulars of his Deſires, demanded twelve Subſidies.

At which high and unreaſonable Demand (as ſome called it) many of the Houſe of Commons were greatly diſtaſted, and expreſſed themſelves to that purpoſe; yet were generally inclined to have given (no uſual, or lean Gift) the Gift of ſix Subſidies.

Sir H. Vane cenſured. Sir Henry Vane eſcaped not without his Cenſures, That his Commiſſion from the King was but to demand ſix Subſidies; and that his miſtake in requiring twelve Subſidies was induſtrious, and on purpoſe to raiſe the Houſe to Animoſity: Which took effect, but whether intended ſo, or not, is hard to judge.

The King adviſing with his Junto, the averſeneſs of the Houſe of Commons to any compliance with him, and their ſharp Debates upon the old ſcore of Grievances was rendred to him ſo deſperate, that May 5, he order'd the Diſſolution of that Parliament.

The Parliament diſſolved. The Council given to diſſolve this Parliament, was greatly and generally diſliked; and the Differences between the King and his People (which were of late too much increaſed, and were hoped might have been cemented by this Parliament) were by the Diſſolution thereof aggravated; and the Scots Troubles which many ſober Men expected this Parliament would have appeaſed, were by the breach of it, feared to grow wider; and the chief blame and Odium of all, was by many laid upon Archbiſhop Laud. He was more buſy in Temporal Affairs and Matters of State than his Predeceſſors of later times had been. My Father, who was anciently and throughly acquainted with him, and knew his Diſpoſition, would ſay, He was too full of Fire, though a juſt and good Man; and that his want of Experience in State Matters, and his too much Zeal for the Church, and Heat, if he proceeded in the way he was then in, would ſet this Nation on Fire.

Laud blamed.

By his Council chiefly (as it was father'd upon him) the Parliament being diſſolved, yet he perſuaded the King to continue the ſitting of the Convocation, by a new Commiſſion granted to them for the concluſion of ſuch Matters as were then in Treaty amongſt them.

Convocation continues ſitting. Yet by the Opinion of Finch, Manchester, Littleton, Banks, Heath, and Shelton, ſignified to the King, the Convocation called by the King's Writ, was not to diſſolve, but by the King's Writ, notwithſtanding the Diſſolution of the Parliament. But it was held beſt, and to clear all Objections, to continue them by this new Commiſſion.

May 9. A Paper was poſted up at the Old Exchange, exhorting the Prentices to riſe, and ſack the Archbiſhop's Houſe at Lambeth, the Monday following; and on that Night about five hundred beſet his Palace; but the Archbiſhop having had notice of the Paper, provided for his Defence, that they could make no entrance, only their Tongues ceaſed not to utter Revilings of all bitterneſs againſt him. Car. 16. Tumult of Prentices.

A few days after, ſome of this Company were taken and tried for Treaſon, upon the Statute 25 Edw. III. for levying War againſt the King, becauſe they had a Drum which beat up before them. The Judges reſolved it to be Treaſon; and one of their Captains, a Cobler, was hang'd, drawn and quarter'd for it, and his Limbs ſet on London Bridge.

In this Caſe, although there was nothing but the breach of the Peace, and of a few Glaſs-windows, and ſetting at liberty ſome Priſoners, and none ſlain, or hurt, yet becauſe ſo great a Number were aſſembled, and in a warlike manner, with a Drum, with unlawful Intents, it was adjudged Treaſon, and the Party ſuffer'd for it.

As the King had his private Juncto's, ſo the Agents of the Covenanters, and their Friends in London, had their private Meetings and Councils, with thoſe who were diſcontented at the preſent managing of Affairs at Court, and who had ſuffered by the late Proceedings; and from hence no ſmall Encouragement and Promiſe of Aſſiſtance was given to the Covenanters.

The King cauſed a Guard to be ſet about Weſtminſter Abbey, that the Convocation might ſit the more ſecurely; yet were not theſe Seats very eaſy, they were in danger of the King's Diſpleaſure, if they roſe, and of the Peoples Fury, if they ſat; to be beaten up by Tumults whilſt they ſat at the Work, and to be beaten down by the next Parliament for doing of the Work.

Epiſcopacy was diſſolved in Scotland, and as much envied by many in England; the Presbyters there were equall'd with Biſhops; the ſame was the Tenet of not a few here; and divers Tracts were written againſt them, and in defence of Biſhops and their Divine Right.

The Aſſembly in Scotland having formed a Covenant for deſtruction of Epiſcopacy; this Convocation for their own ſupport frame an Oath equivalent to be impoſed on all Miniſters.

Oath impoſed by the Convocation.

THAT they approve the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Church of England, as containing all Things neceſſary to Salvation. That they will not endeavour to bring in any Popiſh Doctrine contrary to it; nor give conſent to alter the Government of this Church by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans, and Archdeacons, &c. as it now ſtands eſtabliſhed, and by right ought to ſtand: Nor to ſubject it to the Uſurpations and Superſtitions of Rome. That this they do plainly, and ſincerely acknowledge and ſwear, and do it heartily, willingly, and truly.

This

Anno 1640. Their Canons.

This Synod alſo made a Canon for placing the Communion-Table at the Eaſt End of the Church, ſever'd with Rails, to preſerve it from Profanation; and for permitting the Practice of bowing to the Eaſt, or omiſſion of it, as men were perſuaded in their Conſciences, of the lawfulneſs or unlawfulneſs of it.

They alſo granted to the King an ample Benevolence of the Clergy, of four Shillings in the Pound for ſix Years, towards his intended Expedition againſt the Scots, and ſo brake up the twenty ninth of May.

This added more Fuel to the Flames already burning, and was the Subject of great Debate, and Cenſures which followed.

The King was very active to carry on his Expedition Northwards, he calls a Junćto of ſelect Counſellors, whereof Sir Henry Vane was then thought fit to be truſted for one: At one of their Meetings, he took ſhort Notes of the Debate, which coming afterwards to his Son's Hands, were made uſe of againſt the Earl of Strafford, as will appear in the Story.

And now the Parliament having yielded no Supplies to the King's Occaſions, all the Wheels of Prerogative are ſet on Motion, to provide Money for the King's Affairs.

Knighthood Money.

Knighthood Money is ſet on foot; all Knights and Gentlemen who held Lands in Capite of the King, are ſummoned to ſend Men, Horſes and Arms, agreeable to their Tenures and Qualities.

Londoners diſcontented.

The City of London is invited to a Loan, but they ſtand off, and generally refuſe, being diſcontented at the preſent Proceedings; and particularly diſpleaſed, becauſe their Plantation at London-derry in Ireland was taken from them, (as they held) unjuſtly, by Sentence of the Star-Chamber, adjudged to be forfeited, for their uſurping more Liberty than their Patent warranted, and Fines were impoſed on them, and on the Undertakers: and though they offered, by way of Compoſition, to build for the King a ſtately Palace in St. James's Park, and to pull down Whitehall, and make a ſtately way by the Thames ſide, ſtraight from Charing-croſs to Weſtminſter-hall; yet it would not be accepted.

A Royal Army.

The main Aſſiſtance for this War came from the Officers and Gentry, and a Royal Army was compleated, whereof the Earl of Northumberland was made General, and the Earl of Strafford Lieutenant General; but Northumberland falling ſick, the King himſelf took upon him to be Generaliſſimo, as, being in Perſon in the Expedition, he ought to be.

Duke of Glouceſter born.

July the 20*th*. The King had another Son born, Henry Duke of Glouceſter.

Scots declared Rebels.

The King's Army was marched before; and about Auguſt 20, the King himſelf went out of London, towards the North, and two days after by Proclamation, He declares the Scots Rebels: That he had ſought by Clemency to appeaſe their rebellious Courſes; who upon Pretences of Religion, have ſought to ſhake off his Regal Government; and now take up Arms and invade England. He declares all thoſe who have already entered, or ſhall enter in warlike manner in England, their Adherents and Aſſiſtants to be Rebels and Traitors: Yet if they ſhall acknowledge their former Crimes, and crave pardon, he tenders it to them.

A Prayer was likewiſe publiſhed to be ſaid in all Churches for the King, in his Expedition againſt the Rebels of Scotland.

But nothing could alter the Opinion and Humour of divers of the Officers and private Soldiers of his Army, who in their March to their Rendezvous, ſpared not to declare their Judgments againſt this War; and that they would not fight to maintain the Pride and Power of the Biſhops: And this their Reſolution ſeemed not to be feigned, by the ill Succeſs afterwards. 16 Car.

Conway.

The Lord Conway Commander in chief then upon the Place, to ſecure ſome Paſſes, Auguſt 27, drew out twelve hundred Horſe, and two thouſand Foot, placing the Foot under a Breaſt-work, to gall the Scots in their paſs over the River Tine, near New-Caſtle.

Leſley.

General Leſley over-night had planted nine Pieces of Ordnance on his ſide of the River, and blinded them with Buſhes. In the Morning, he craves leave of the Lord Conway, to paſs with his Petition to the King, he was admitted to paſs with a conſiderable Number, but not with his Army.

But Leſley would not divide his Forces, and fords over three hundred Horſe, whom the Engliſh behind the Breaſt-work forced to retire, and Leſley to relieve them, plays his Cannon from the Blind upon the Engliſh, drove them from their Poſt, and they caſt down their Arms and fled.

The Engliſh worſted at Wilmot.

Then their Horſe advanced upon Wilmot, Commiſſary General of the King's Horſe; who accompanied with prime Gentlemen, ſtood to the Charge of the Scots Horſe and Cannon, till galled and over-powered with Number, they retired in diſorder, three hundred of them being ſlain and taken Priſoners.

Conway was fain to retreat with this ill News to the King, whom he found at North-Allerton.

Sir Jacob Aſhley Governor of Newcaſtle for the King, quitted that Town to the Scots, and they became poſſeſt of it, and within two days after, of Durham likewiſe.

Strafford brought up the Rear of the Army retreating to York, where the King ſtaid; and the Miſcarriage of Conway was examined, who being accuſed of Cowardiſe or Treachery, uſed his beſt Art and Flouriſhes to vindicate himſelf: yet ſomething ſtuck upon him.

Conway accuſed.

This gave Alarm to the Earl of Hadington, who with two thouſand Horſe and Foot purſued and reſcued the Cannon, and the next day, he, and twenty more Knights and Gentlemen in an inſtant were all ſlain by an Accident of Fire, which blew up the Magazine of Powder in a Vault, and they were killed by the Stones which flew from the Vault.

The Scots Petition.

The Scots having got on this ſide the Breeze, in a warmer and more fruitful Country than their own; with Fires of Newcaſtle Coal, with Meat, Drink, and Lodging of the beſt: They now petition the King, In the Name of the Lords of the laſt Parliament, and others his Majeſty's loyal Subjects of Scotland; complaining of their Grievances in general, for relief whereof they are conſtrained to come, without prejudice to the Peace of England, till they were with Arms oppoſed in their Paſſage at Newborn; and now preſent themſelves to his Majeſty's Goodneſs, for Satisfaction of their full Demands, and Repair of their Wrongs and Loſſes, with the Advice of the Parliament of England to be convented.

The King anſwers,

The King's Anſwer.

That he expects their particular Demands, having already ſummoned the Peers of England to meet at York, September 24, and commands them to advance no farther.

Demands of the Scots.

1. That the late Acts of Parliament may be publiſhed in his Majeſty's Name, with the States of Parliament.

2. That Edinburgh Caſtle, and other Strengths of Scotland may be fortified, and uſed for our defence and ſecurity.

3. That our Country-men in England and Ireland may not be preſſed with Oaths and Subſcriptions, contrary to the National Oath and Covenant.

4. That the common Incendiaries may receive their Cenſure.

5. That our Ships and Goods, and Damage may be reſtored.

6. That the Wrongs, Loſſes, and Charges, which all the time we have ſuſtained, may be repaired.

7 That the Declarations againſt us, as Traitors, may be recalled.

8. That by Advice of the Parliament of England, Gariſons may be removed from the Borders, and all Impediments of free Trade and Peace ſettled for our Religion and Liberties.

9. That the meeting of the Peers the 24th Septemb. will be too long ere the Parliament be convened, the only means of ſettling Peace, and enabling us to obey his Majeſty's Commands.

In this time ſome of the Engliſh Lords well affected to a Parliament, and no bitter Enemies to the Covenanters, had framed a Petition, which they ſent by ſome of their number to the King to York, and it was to this effect:

The Lords Petition.

They ſet forth their Zeal to the King and Kingdom, moving them to beſeech his Majeſty's leave, to offer to his Princely Wiſdom, the Apprehenſion they and others of his loyal Subjects have of the Diſtempers and Dangers to the Church and State, and to his Perſon, and the means to prevent them.

The Evils they mention are firſt;

That his ſacred Perſon is expoſed to danger in this Expedition, and by the War his Revenue waſted, his Subjects burdened with Coat and Conduct-money, Billetting of Soldiers, and other Military Charges, and divers Rapines and Diſorders, by the Soldiers, and the Kingdom full of Fears and Diſcontents.

2. The Innovations in matters of Religion, the Oath and Canons lately impoſed.

3. The great Increaſe of Popery, and imploying Popiſh Recuſants, and others ill affected to Religion in Places of Power and Truſt.

4. The Miſchiefs which may fall, if the Intentions, which have been credibly reported of bringing in Iriſh and foreign Forces, ſhould take effect.

5. The urging of Ship-money, and proſecuting Sheriffs for not levying of it.

6. The heavy Charge upon Merchandize, and the Monopolies.

7. The great Grief of the Subjects by long Intermiſſion of Parliaments, and the late and former Diſſolutions of them. 16 Car.

" For Remedy, they humbly beſeech his Ma-
" jeſty to ſummon a Parliament, whereby the
" Cauſes of theſe Grievances may be taken away,
" and the Authors and Counſellors of them pu-
" niſhed. That the preſent War may be com-
" poſed without Blood, to the honour and ſafety
" of the King, the comfort of his People, and
" the uniting of both Realms.

Concluded, Auguſt 28.
1640.

SUBSCRIBED,

Bedford, Eſſex, Mulgrave, Say and Seal, Ed. Howard, E. of Briſtol.
Hertford, Warwick, Bullingbrook, Mandevill, Brook, Paget.

The King's Anſwer to this Petition was,

The King's Anſwer.

" That before the receipt of it, he well foreſaw
" the danger that threatens Himſelf and Crown,
" and therefore reſolved to ſummon all the Peers
" to his Preſence the twenty fourth of September,
" and with them to conſult what in this Caſe is fit-
" teſt to be done for his Honour, and Safety of " the Kingdom, when the Petitioners with the
" reſt might offer any thing conducing to theſe
" ends.

This was followed with a Petition of the Citizens of London, ſetting forth their Grievances, and the Remedy by calling a Parliament: Much to the ſame effect with the Petition of the Lords.

Petition of the Citizens of London.

The Scots at Newcaſtle ſeize four great Engliſh Ships, laden with Corn, lay a Tax of three hundred and fifty Pounds a day on the Biſhoprick of Durham, and three hundred Pounds a day on Northumberland, on pain of plundering; and committed many Injuries and Inſolencies on the Engliſh where they quartered.

The great Council met at York 24. Septemb. according to ſummons; and the King ſpake to them, That he had called them for their Advice and Aſſiſtance in this time of Exigency, according to the cuſtom of his Predeceſſors. That he, of himſelf, had reſolved to call a Parliament, to meet 3*d.* Novemb. next; and in the mean time required their Advice, in thoſe things which could not ſtay until the meeting of the Parliament.

The Council at York.

The War being begun with the Scots, put many Men to think of a Poſture of Defence for themſelves, and to a Proviſion of Arms.

The Diſcourſes of the Scotiſh War, were very various, thoſe who favour'd the Popiſh and Prelatical Ways, did ſufficiently inveigh againſt the Covenanters; but generally the reſt of the People favoured and approved their Proceedings; and there was a ſtrange Spirit of diviſion in the Opinions and Wiſhes of moſt Men in theſe Affairs, too many not only favouring, but joining with, and aſſiſting the Proceedings of the Scots Covenanters.

The Scotiſh War variouſly diſcourſed of.

After ſeveral Meetings and Debates in the great Council at York, a Meſſenger was ſent from the King and Lords to the Scots Army, to give notice to them, That on Tueſday next, ſixteen of the Engliſh Lords ſhould meet with as many Scotch Lords at York, to treat of the differences. But the Scots refuſe York to treat in, as not ſecure for their Commiſſioners,

Meſſage to the Scots.

Commiſſioners, ſo long as the Lieutenant of Ireland commanded there in chief, who had proclaimed them Traitors in Ireland, before the King had done it in England, threatning to deſtroy their Memory; againſt whom they had high matters of Complaint.

Complaint againſt Strafford.

This was the firſt publick appearance of the Scots enmity againſt Strafford; which ſome affirm was ſet on from hence; and it was ſtrange that it ſhould not be more regarded.

Treaty at Rippon.

Another Place of Treaty was named at Rippon, where the Commiſſioners on both ſides met. The Engliſh propoſed a Ceſſation of Arms, but the Scots, as they would obey the King's commands, not to advance; ſo they could not return, till they had effected their Buſineſs.

2. For ſafe Convoys for their Commiſſioners.

3. Safe Convoys for all Letters to, and from the Parliament.

4 For free Trade of both Kingdoms, and Newcaſtle Trade not to be hindred.

At length the Commiſſioners on both Parts agree

To a Ceſſation of Arms,

To a Contribution of 850 l. per diem for the Scots Army in Northumberland, Weſtmorland, Durham and Newcaſtle.

The River Tees to be the bound of both Armies.

Private Inſolences to be no Breach of the Treaty, with divers other Conditions, and their chief Demands were referred to a general Treaty to be proceeded in at London.

The Treaty variouſly cenſured.

Many wondred, and ſome inveighed againſt this Treaty, wiſhing the King would have put it rather to the Iſſue of a Battle; than to have given ſuch Terms to his Subjects in Rebellion, and of this Judgment was Strafford, and the Epiſcopal Party. But the other Party cried up this Treaty, as Juſt, Honourable and Pious; to prevent effuſion of Blood, and to ſettle Peace, and the King ſaw plainly that both, divers Officers of his Army, and even the private Soldiers generally (which was a moſt remarkable Inclination) had no mind to fight againſt the Scots; which chiefly cauſed the King to conclude this Treaty.

The Reſolution of calling a Parliament, ſet many on work to canvaſs for Places. The Court laboured to bring in their Friends; but thoſe who were moſt favour'd at Court, had leaſt reſpect in the Country and it was not a little ſtrange to ſee what a Spirit of oppoſition to the Court proceedings, was in the Hearts, and actions of moſt of the People, ſo that very few of that Party had the favour to be choſen Members of this Parliament.

Montroſs.

The Earl of Montroſs of great alliance in Scotland came into England, to ſerve the King, but by Hamilton's cunning, as was ſuppoſed, the King, at his firſt coming to him, neglected him; which cauſed his reſort to, and joining with the Covenanters: being weary of them, he now writes to the King to York, profeſſing his Loyalty, and Service to His Majeſty.

This Letter, by Hamilton's means, as was reported, was ſtolen out of the King's Pocket, copied, and ſent to the Covenanters, they made uſe of it, as ſhall be mentioned hereafter.

3 Novem. a day ominous.

The third Day of November, the Parliament was to meet, ſome perſuaded the Archbiſhop to get it adjourned for two or three Days; becauſe that the third of November was an ominous Day; the Parliament called on that Day 20 H. VIII. beginning with the fall of Cardinal Wolſey, and ending in the diſſolution of Abbeys, but the Archbiſhop took little heed of ſuch things. 16 Car.

The time of the Parliaments meeting drawing near, it was conſidered at York, whether the Earl of Strafford ſhould repair to the Houſe, or continue in the North with the Army.

Strafford perſuaded to go to the Parliament.

The King was earneſt for his going up to the Parliament, as one, of whoſe Service he ſhould have great occaſion, and placed much confidence in his Faithfulneſs and Abilities.

The Earl humbly deſired his Majeſty to excuſe his going to the Parliament, alledging that he ſhould not be able to do his Majeſty any Service there; but ſhould rather be a means to hinder his Affairs; in regard he foreſaw that the great Envy, and Ill-will of the Parliament, and of the Scots, would be bent againſt him.

Whereas, if he kept out of ſight he would not be ſo much in their mind, as he ſhould be, by ſhewing himſelf in Parliament; and if they ſhould fall upon him, he being at a diſtance, whatſoever they ſhould conclude againſt him, he might the better avoid, and retire from any danger, having the liberty of being out of their Hands, and to go over to Ireland, or to ſome other Place, where he might be moſt ſerviceable to his Majeſty, but if he ſhould put himſelf into their Power, by coming up to the Parliament, it was evident that the Houſe of Commons, and the Scots with all their Party, eſpecially being provoked by his coming amongſt them, would preſently fall upon him, and proſecute his deſtruction.

The King, notwithſtanding theſe reaſons, continued very earneſt for Strafford's coming up to the Parliament; for which, he laid his commands upon him; and told him, that as he was King of England, he was able to ſecure him from any danger; and that the Parliament ſhould not touch one Hair of his Head.

The Earl thank'd his Majeſty, but replied, that if there ſhould fall out a difference between his Majeſty, and his Parliament, concerning him; that it would be a great diſturbance to his Majeſty's Affairs; and that he had rather ſuffer himſelf, than that the King's Affairs ſhould in any meaſure ſuffer, by reaſon of his particular.

The King remained unalterable in his reſolution, concerning Strafford's coming up to the Parliament, ſaying that he could not want his Advice, in the great Tranſactions, which were like to be in this Parliament, and in obedience to his Commands, the Earl came up to London.

Upon a conteſted Election for the Borough of Great Marlow, in the County of Bucks; upon my Petition, and the Petition of divers of the Burgeſſes and Inhabitants of the ſaid Borough: At the Committee the caſe of Winchelſea 21 Jac. was cited, wherein the Houſe of Commons reſolved, that Notice of the Election ought to be given, and for want thereof that the Election ſhould be void for all.

And the caſe of Strafford 21 Jac. that Mr. Dyett having gotten into his Hands the Sheriffs Precept, brought it to the Mayor, and procured the Election to be preſently made by ſending for ſome of the Burgeſſes; the Election was reſolved to be void for all, and a new Election ordered for both Burgeſſes.

The Committee were of the ſame Opinion in this caſe of Marlow, and paſſed a vote for a new Election of both the Burgeſſes for that Borough.

The Houſe agreed with the Committee, upon the iſſuing out of a new Writ; Mr. Hoby and I were choſen, and took our Places in Parliament.

The

Anno 1640. The King in his Speech to both Houſes, had told them that he was reſolved to put himſelf freely upon the love, and affections of his Engliſh Subjects.

Speech to the Parliament. He told them, the wants of his own Army, the Calamities of the Northern Countries, where both Armies lay, and freely leaves it to them, where to begin, promiſeth Redreſs of Grievances; and deſires that all ſuſpicion of one another may be laid aſide.

Some Exception being taken that in his Speech he called the Scots, Rebels, he after explains, and juſtifies, in his Speech to the Lords.

The firſt Week was ſpent in naming general Committees, and eſtabliſhing them, and receiving a great many Petitions, both from particular Perſons, and ſome from Multitudes, and brought by Troops of Horſemen from ſeveral Counties, craving redreſs of Grievances; and of Exorbitances, both in Church and State.

Petitions.

Many were enlarged out of Priſon to make their Complaints, Prynne, Burton, Baſtwick and others.

Pym of Grievances. Many ſmart Speeches were made in the Houſe of Commons, touching Grievances, which Mr. Pym divided into three Heads.

1. Againſt Privilege of Parliament.
2. Prejudice of Religion.
3. Liberty of the Subject.

Under the firſt Head were reckoned,

1. Reſtraining the Members of Parliament from ſpeaking.

6. Abrupt Diſſolutions of Parliaments.

Under the ſecond head of Religion were mentioned.

1. The ſuſpenſion of Laws againſt them of the Popiſh Religion; Laws, and Oaths will not reſtrain them; the Pope diſpenſeth with all.
2. Their Places of Truſt, and Honour in the Commonwealth.
3. Their free Reſort to London, and to the Court, to communicate their Councils and Deſigns.
4. As they have a College in Rome for the Pope's authority in England, ſo they have a Nuntio here to execute it.

Under Innovations of Religion were brought in.

1. Maintenance of Popiſh Tenets, in Books, Sermons and Diſputes.
2. Practice of Popiſh Ceremonies countenanced and injoined, as Altars, Images, Crucifixes, Bowings.
3. Diſcouragement of Proteſtants, by rigid Proſecution of the ſcrupulous, for things indifferent, no Vice made ſo great as Inconformity.
4. Incroachment of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction.
1. In fining, and impriſoning without Law.
2. Challenging their Juriſdiction to be appropriate to their order, Jure Divino.
3. Contriving, and publiſhing new Orders of Viſitation in force, as of Canons, the boldneſs of Biſhops, and all their ſubordinate Officers and Officials.

Under the third Head, the Grievances.

1. By Tunage and Poundage unduly taken.
2. Compoſition for Knighthood.
3. The unparalell'd grievance of Ship-money.
4. Enlargement of the Foreſts beyond the due Bounds.
5. Selling of Nuſances, by compounding for them.
6. The Commiſſion for Building.
7. The Commiſſion for Depopulations.

9. Extrajudicial Declarations of Judges, without hearing Council, or Arguments.
10. Monopolies, countenanced by the Council Table, and Juſtices of the Peace required to aſſiſt them.
11. The Star-Chamber Court.
13. The ambitious and corrupt Clergy preaching Divine Authority, and Abſolute Power in Kings, to do what they will.
14. The Intermiſſion of Parliaments.

Lord Digby. The Lord Digby mentioned the late Benevolence, and the New canon Oath, which he called a Covenant againſt the King for Biſhops, and the Scots Covenant is againſt the King and Biſhops.

Many other Speeches were made, by ſeveral Members, all of them to the ſame Effect, touching Grievances.

The King made the Lord Cottington Conſtable of the Tower of London, and placed there a Gariſon of 400 Men, to keep the City from Tumults. But the Houſe of Commons and others without, much unſatisfied thereat, the King took off the Gariſon, and Commiſſion of Conſtable, and left the command of it to a Lieutenant, as before.

Proclamations againſt Papiſts. Upon the extraordinary confluence of Popiſh Recuſants to London, the King ſent a Meſſage to the Parliament that by Proclamation they ſhould be removed to their Places of Abode, and diſarmed.

The Houſe of Commons ordered that all Projectors, and unlawful Monopoliſts, be diſabled to ſit in the Houſe, and many Members thereupon withdrew themſelves, and new Elections were made in their Rooms.

Earl of Warwick. Complaint was made to the Lords Houſe of Breach of their Privilege, by ſearch of the Pockets, Cabinets and Studies of the Earl of Warwick, and the Lord Brooke, upon the diſſolving of the laſt Parliament. Sir William Beecher, one of the Clerks of the Council, who did it upon command of the Secretaries of State, was committed to the Fleet.

Impeachment againſt Strafford. The Houſe of Commons ſent up a Meſſage to the Lords, by Mr. Pym, The impeachment of the Earl of Strafford of High Treaſon, upon which the Earl was committed to the Black Rod, and Sir George Ratcliffe, his Confederate, was ſent for out of Ireland, by a Serjeant at Arms.

The two Armies lay a heavy Burden on the Counties where they quartered, to eaſe which the Parliament borrowed 100000 l. of the City of London.

Upon ſuit of the Lords to the King, the Biſhop of Lincoln was releaſed out of the Tower.

The Earl of Strafford moved, that he might be bailed, by divers Lords, who offered to be Sureties for him, which was denied; but a Council, and a Solicitor were aſſigned to him.

Habeas Corpus. In the Houſe, there fell out a Debate touching the Writs of Habeas Corpus, upon which Selden, and the reſt of his Fellow-Priſoners demanded to be bailed, and the Judges of the King's Bench did not bail them, as by Law they ought; but required of them Sureties for their good Behaviours.

This was ſo far aggravated by ſome, that they moved the Priſoners might have Reparation out of the Eſtates of thoſe Judges, who then ſat in the King's Bench, when they were remanded to Priſon, which Judges they named to be, Hyde, Jones, and my Father, as for Judge Crooke, who was one of that Anno 1640. that Court, they excuſed him, as differing in Opinion from the reſt.

I being a Member of the Houſe, and Son to the Judge, knew this to be miſtaken, as to the Fact, and ſpake in the behalf of my Father to this effect, That is was not unknown to divers worthy Members of the Houſe, that Judge Whitelocke had been a faithful, able and ſtout aſſertor of the Rights and Liberties of the free-born Subjects of this Kingdom, for which he had been many ways a ſufferer. And particularly by a ſtraight and cloſe Impriſonment, for what he ſaid and did, as a Member of this honourable Houſe, in a former Parliament. And he appeals to thoſe noble Gentlemen, who cannot but remember thoſe paſſages, and ſome, who were then ſufferers with him. And for his Opinion, and Carriage in the caſe of Habeas Corpus, 'tis affirmed to have been the ſame with that of Judge Crooke, and he appeals for this, to the honourable Gentlemen, who were concerned in it; and others, who were preſent then in Court.

Judges Crooke and Whitelocke cleared.

Hampden and divers others ſeconded this Motion; who affirmed very much of the matter of Fact, and expreſſed themſelves with great reſpect, and honour to the Memory of the deceaſed Judge, who was thereupon reckoned by the Houſe, in the ſame Degree with Judge Crooke, as to their Cenſure, and Proceedings.

One Mr. Heyward, an active Juſtice of Peace in Weſtminſter, had drawn up a Catalogue of the Recuſants there, for the Committee of Religion, which occaſioned one James a Papiſt to ſtab Heyward in Weſtminſter-Hall; but not to Death, and James was privately puniſhed.

Prynne and Burton.

Prynne and Burton were conducted into London from their ſeveral Priſons, by many hundreds of Horſe and Foot in great pomp, and defiance of Juſtice, and they petitioned the Houſe of Commons for damages againſt their Proſecutors.

Windebank.

Sir Francis Windebank, Secretary of State, and a great Intimate of Archbiſhop Laud, having been queſtioned for reprieving Jeſuits, and Prieſts, and ſuſpected of worſe matters, to prevent any farther Trial, he eſcaped into France; where he remained to his Death (as is reported) a profeſſed Papiſt.

The Houſe of Commons voted,

Votes.

1. That the charge of Ship-money was againſt the Law, the Subjects Right and Property, and contrary to former Reſolutions in Parliament, and to the Petition of Right.

2. That the extrajudicial Opinion of the Judges was againſt the Law, &c. ut prius.

3. That the Shipwrits were againſt the Law.

4. That the Judgment in Mr. Hampden's Caſe, about Ship-money, was againſt Law, &c.

The Houſe of Lords paſſed the ſame Votes, and the next day a Committee was appointed, to draw up a Charge of Treaſon againſt ſuch as had been abbetors therein, the Lord Keeper Finch, and the reſt of the Judges.

Committee againſt Strafford.

The Houſe of Commons, having engaged to preſent to the Lords particular Articles of their Charge of High Treaſon againſt the Earl of Strafford, they now were moved to appoint a ſelect Committee to prepare and draw up thoſe Articles, and to manage the Evidence againſt the Earl at his Trial, and that this Committee ſhould be under an engagement of Secrecy, in regard of the Nature, and Greatneſs of the Buſineſs.

Of this Committee, were named, Pym, Hampden, Hollis, Lord Digby, Stroud, and Sir Walter Earle, Selden, St. John, Maynard, Palmer, Glynne, and my ſelf.

I was choſen Chairman of the Committee, the Papers were all delivered to my Cuſtody and truſt, and an engagement of Secrecy was made ſolemnly, in the nature of a voluntary Oath, by every one of the Committee, and they did ſit almoſt every Day to prepare the Articles of the Charge againſt the Earl of Strafford. 16 Car.

Alderman Pennington.

11 Decemb. Alderman Pennington, with ſome hundreds following him, preſented the Citizens Petition, ſubſcribed by 15000, againſt the Diſcipline, and Ceremonies of the Church.

The Houſe of Commons 15 Decemb. Reſolved.

That the Clergy in a Synod or Convocation, hath no Power to make Laws, Canons or Conſtitutions, to bind either Laity or Clergy, without the Parliament. And that the Canons, made by the late Convocation, are againſt the fundamental Laws of this Realm, the King's Prerogative, Propriety of the Subject, the Rights of Parliament, and do tend to Faction, and Sedition.

They alſo voted, that a Bill ſhould be brought in, to fine thoſe of the Clergy who ſat in the late Convocation, and were Actors in making thoſe Canons.

The like Proceedings were to be had againſt the Judges, for their Opinions, and Judgment in the Caſe of Ship-money.

Laud Impeached.

Mr. Hollis is ſent up to the Lords with an Impeachment of High Treaſon, againſt Archbiſhop Laud, and the Scots joined him with the Earl of Strafford, as Incendiaries in the National differences.

Upon reading of both Charges, the Archbiſhop was committed to the Black Rod.

The Scots Commiſſioners conclude their Accuſation againſt him, That if the Pope had been in his Place, he could not have been more zealous againſt the reformed Churches, to reduce them to the Hereſies, Doctrines, Superſtitions, Idolatries of Rome, &c.

They likewiſe exhibited a Charge againſt the Earl of Strafford's Confident, Sir George Ratcliffe, and having ſecured the great Stateſman Strafford, and the great Churchman Laud; the Commons prepare to impeach the chief Officer of Law, the Lord Keeper Finch, of High Treaſon.

Lord Keeper Finch.

He having notice thereof, deſired leave of the Houſe to be admitted to ſpeak for himſelf before them, which was granted, and a Chair ſet for him, near to the Bar, he came into the Houſe, carrying the Purſe himſelf, and when the Speaker told him that his Lordſhip might ſit, he made a low obeiſance, and laying down the Seal, and his Hat in the Chair, himſelf leaning on the backſide of it, made a very elegant, and ingenious Speech, in his own vindication, et captare Benevolentiam, and delivered with an excellent grace, and geſture as well as words.

His beginning was thus.

Mr. Speaker,

His Speech.

I give you thanks for granting me admittance to your preſence, I come not to preſerve my ſelf, and fortunes, but to preſerve your good Opinion of me; for I profeſs, I had rather beg my Bread from door to door, with date obolum Belliſario, with your favour, than be never ſo high, and honoured, with your diſpleaſure.

His Concluſion was, If I may not live to ſerve you, I deſire, I may die in your good Opinion and Favour.

Many were exceedingly taken with his Eloquence, and Carriage, and it was a ſad ſight, to ſee

Anno 1640. ſee a Perſon of his Greatneſs, Parts, and Favour, to appear in ſuch a Poſture, before ſuch an Aſſembly, to plead for his Life and Fortunes.

Upon theſe following particulars, he was the ſame Day voted a Traitor.

Articles againſt Finch.

1. For refuſing to read the Remonſtrance againſt the Lord Treaſurer Weſton, 4 Car. when the Parliament deſired it.

2. For Soliciting, perſuading, and threatning the Judges to deliver their Opinions for the levying of Ship-money.

3. For ſeveral illegal Actions in Foreſt matters.

4. For ill Offices done, in making the King to diſſolve the laſt Parliament, and cauſing his Declaration thereupon to be put forth.

The next Day, he was accuſed before the Lords, but he got up earlier, gave them the ſlip, and eſcaped into Holland.

The Houſe of Commons upon Debate of the Inconveniences, by the intermiſſion of Parliaments, they appointed a Committee to bring in a Bill for a Triennial Parliament.

This Committee met often, and was much frequented by all the Grandees of the Houſe, then in moſt repute, after divers, and great Debates, and Conſultations, they agreed upon the frame of a Bill, as the ſame is extant. The King taking notice thereof, and of the many Petitions from ſeveral Counties, ſubſcribed with multitudes of Hands, and preſented by great numbers of People, and all the Petitions mentioning the late exorbitances, and concluding for frequent Parliaments, and againſt the Hierarchy of the Biſhops.

Petitions.

King's Speech.

The King being informed thereof, and miſtruſting the Inclination of the Parliament, ſpeaks to both Houſes, Of their ſlow Proceedings, and the Inconveniences thereby, in maintaining two Armies in the Kingdom at exceſſive charges, and of the weakneſs of his Navy and Forts.

He takes notice of the ſtrange Petitions from Counties, againſt the eſtabliſhed Government of the Church: tells them, He makes a difference between Reformation, and Alteration of Government; that he is for the firſt, but not for the latter.

He will not ſay but that the Biſhops may have overſtretched their Power, and incroached upon the Temporal: If they will reform the Abuſe, he is with them; he will conſent to take away ſome Temporal Authority, if they have any inconvenient to the State, and not neceſſary to the ſupport of Epiſcopacy.

But he cannot conſent to the taking away their Voice in Parliament, which they have ſo anciently enjoyed, even before the Conqueſt, and ſince; and which he conceives, he is bound to maintain, as one of the fundamental Inſtitutions of this Kingdom.

He wiſhes them to eſchew another Rock, upon the Bill for frequent Parliaments, which he likes well, but to give Power to Sheriffs, Conſtables, and he knows not whom, to do his Office, that he cannot yield unto.

The King had reprieved one Goodman a Prieſt, who was condemned at the Old Baily: the Commons deſire the Lords Concurrence; and both Houſes remonſtrate to the King the danger thereof in theſe times, and the increaſe of Popery, and boldneſs of Papiſts, in reſorting to Maſs in London; the King leaveth him to the Parliament.

The Treaty with the Scots Commiſſioners proceeded at London, and their Demands were in effect all yielded unto. Upon their Seventh Demand, from the juſtice and kindneſs of the Kingdom of Reparation for their Loſſes and Charges, a long Debate was in the Houſe of Commons, about framing the Words of the Queſtion, and the ſtating of it.

Demands of the Scots yielded to.

The Queſtion ſtated, was to give them three hundred thouſand Pounds as a brotherly aſſiſtance towards their Charges and Loſſes. 16 Car.

The Houſe commanded Mr. Speaker to write to the City of London, to advance ſixty thouſand Pounds upon Security out of the next Subſidies, which was done accordingly, and ſeveral other Sums were advanced by them upon Security of the Houſe for Supply of the King's Army, and providing for the Northern Counties.

The Dutch Ambaſſador here made an Overture of a Marriage between William the young Prince of Orange, and the King's eldeſt Daughter, the Princeſs Mary: to which the King was well inclined; but as his Condition then ſtood, he thought fit to acquaint the Parliament with it, which he did in a Speech to the Houſe of Lords, and That he thought the Alliance with the Prince, and the United Provinces would be of much Advantage to this Kingdom; and ſhewed his Reaſons for it.

The Propoſition was generally affected and embraced by all the People, and without fears or jealouſies upon our Liberties or Religion, and was ſoon concluded.

The Houſe of Commons ſent up a Meſſage to the Lords, to acquaint them that the Commons were informed of a great Deſign of the Papiſts, an Army of fifteen thouſand in Lancaſhire, and eight thouſand in Ireland, well armed and in pay, raiſed by the Earls of Strafford, and of Worceſter; this gave occaſion for many other Petitions: but nothing was made out of the Rumour thereof.

February 13, 1640. Sir Robert Berkley one of the Judges of the King's Bench, who gave his Opinion for Ship-money, was impeached by the Commons of High Treaſon in the Lords Houſe, and by their Command, Maxwell the Uſher of the Black Rod came to the King's Bench when the Judges were ſitting, took Judge Berkley from off the Bench, and carried him away to Priſon, which ſtruck a great Terrour in the reſt of his Brethren then ſitting in Weſtminſter-Hall, and in all his Profeſſion.

Judge Berkley.

This Judge was a very learned Man in our Laws, and a good Orator and Judge, moderate in his ways; except his deſires of the Court-favour: he redeemed himſelf afterwards by ſupplying the Parliament's Occaſions with ten thouſand Pounds, and ended his days in a private Retirement; yet not without conſiderable Gains by his Chamber-Practice, and left a plentiful Fortune to his Family.

The Committee for the Bill of the Triennial Parliament, had taken a great deal of Pains in the framing of it, and it being paſt both Houſes, the King was not without ſome Difficulty (as it was reported) perſuaded to give the Royal Aſſent to it, which he did in his Speech to both Houſes, ſetting forth His Confidence thereby in them, and in their future Proceedings, and the favour he now did to his Subjects.

Triennial Parliament.

The King's Speech.

The King then alſo paſſed the Bill of Subſidies, and both Houſes, by the Lord Keeper Littleton, returned their humble Thanks to his Majeſty, and by their Order were Bonfires, and Bell-ringing, ſigns of Joy throughout the City.

Mr. Pym, was ſent from the Houſe of Commons to the Lords, with the Charge of High Treaſon, againſt the Archbiſhop Laud, who was thereupon committed to the Tower.

Articles of Particulars againſt Epiſcopal Government were preſented to the Houſe of Commons annexed to ſome Petitions; and being read in the Houſe, were referred to a Committee.

The

Anno 1640. The Lord Digby, ſpake ſmartly againſt them, and for Epiſcopacy, but not many others were very eager for them.

The Commons the tenth of March Voted,

Votes. That no Biſhop ſhall have any Vote in Parliament, nor any judicial Power in the Star-chamber, nor bear any Authority in Temporal Matters; and that no Clergyman ſhall be in Commiſſion of the Peace.

Foreign Affairs. The King of Spain was brought low by the Defection of Catalonia, Portugal, and part of the Indies, the loſs of Arras, and his ill Succeſſes in Italy, beſides the approach of the Swediſh War to the back of the Danube, but this year was very fortunate to the French.

The Spaniards ill Succeſs was attributed to the ill Management of Affairs by the Conde de Olivarez his Favourite, hated by the People as is uſual. And the good Succeſſes of the French were attributed to the Prudence of their Cardinal Richlieu.

He invites the Duke of Lorain to Paris, where he was highly careſſed, but apprehending their Deſigns, he comes to the diſcontented Princes of France, who had raiſed an Army at Sedan: And from thence from the Count of Soiſſons, the Duke of Guiſe, and the reſt, a Manifeſto is publiſhed of their taking Arms for the Peace of Europe and Expulſion of him who fomented the publick Wars.

They make Alliance with the Emperor and Cardinal Infanta, and joining Forces with General Lamboy, they come to Battle, where the Count de Soiſſons was ſlain, and their Forces overthrown, and Richlieu gets more Advantage thereby againſt the Houſe of Auſtria.

Strafford. The cloſe Committee for managing the buſineſs againſt the Earl of Strafford, ſat very conſtantly, and took great pains in framing the Articles againſt him, and preparing of Witneſſes for proof of them; for ſome of which Witneſſes there were Meſſengers ſent into Ireland to bring them hither.

All the Papers, Proofs, and Examinations in this Buſineſs were committed to my Care and Charge, being Chairman to the Committee.

The Committee had often reſort to the Houſe of Commons for their direction upon any Point of Difficulty, and they were appointed by the Houſe to be the Managers of the Evidence againſt the Earl; and accordingly they divided the Work among themſelves.

January 30. Mr. Pym preſented to the Lords the particular Articles of the Charge againſt the Earl of Strafford, being 28.

The Earl was immediately ſent for to the Lords Houſe, where he heard the Articles read, and they being two hundred Sheets of Paper, and ſome of the Treaſons being of fourteen years ſtanding, he deſired three Months time to make his Anſwer, which muſt alſo of neceſſity be very long, and being unto matters of ſo high concernment, eſpecially to his own Life and Fortunes.

This time was oppoſed by the Houſe of Commons, and at length the Lords order'd his Anſwer to be brought in by the 24th of February next, which was done, tho to the great labour of his Lordſhip, and of Sir Richard Lane, and others of his Council: and on that Day it was read in the Audience of the King, and in the Houſe of Commons the next Day after.

Diſputes touching the Trial. Some Diſputes aroſe between the two Houſes, touching the Trial.

1. Whether Council ſhould be allowed for the Earl? which the Commons oppoſed, as not allowable in caſe of high Treaſon, which the Lords ſaid, was true as to pleading of Matter of Fact, but not in Matters of Law, which was at length yielded to.

2. Concerning the place of Trial, the Lords deſired it might be in their Houſe; which the Commons oppoſed, becauſe they intended to manage their Accuſation by Members of their own Houſe, in the preſence of the whole Houſe, for which the Lords Houſe would be too little: Whereupon Weſtminſter-hall was agreed upon. Car. 16.

3. The Commons intended to come in the Body of their whole Houſe, which the Lords not aſſenting to, they at laſt yielded to come, as a Committee of the whole Houſe.

But there was a Propoſal (the Subject of much Diſcourſe) to prevent all this trouble, and to reſtore the Earl of Strafford to his former Favour and Honour; if the King would prefer ſome of the Grandees to Offices at Court, whereby Strafford's Enemies ſhould become his Friends, and the King's Deſires be promoted. Undertakers.

It was that ſhould be made Lord Treaſurer, the Lord Say Maſter of the Wards, Mr. Pym Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Hollis, Secretary of State, Mr. Hampden Tutor to the Prince, others to have other Places.

In order whereunto the Biſhop of London reſigned up his Treaſurer's Staff, the Lord Cottington his Place of Maſter of the Wards, and the reſt were eaſily to be voided. But whether upon the King's alteration of his Mind, or by what other means it came to paſs, is uncertain: Theſe things were not effected; and the great Men baffled thereby, became the more incenſed, and violent againſt the Earl, joining with the Scots Commiſſioners, who were implacable againſt him.

The time and place of the Earl's Trial was appointed, Weſtminſter-hall prepared for it; and never was there, or any where elſe ſeen, a more ſolemn and majeſtick Tribunal. Trial of Strafford.

In the middle of the Theatre, below, on Forms covered with red Cloth, ſat the Lords in their Parliament Robes, their Faces upwards; at the head of them, with his Face towards them, ſat in a Chair the Earl of Arundel, for that occaſion made Lord High Steward of England; and at that Trial, the Speaker of the Peers, the Earl of Lindſey, was made Lord High Conſtable of England for that time, and had the ordering of the Place.

Scaffolds were erected on either ſide of the Hall, and at the lower end, on thoſe Scaffolds, ſat the Members of the Houſe of Commons, uncovered, as a Committee of the whole Houſe, and many hundreds more of Gentlemen who could get places with them.

Beyond the Peers, towards the upper end, was placed a Chair and Cloth of State for the King, raiſed on a Foot-pace, on either ſide whereof was a cloſe Gallery for the King, Queen, and Prince to be private.

At the lower end of the State, on a Scaffold, did uſually ſit Ladies of Quality; on the right hand at the lower end, even with the Lords, was a place with Partitions for the Committee of Parliament, and a Door backwards out of it to a place for a withdrawing Room for them to retire to and conſult as there was offer'd occaſion.

On the other ſide of the place for the Committee, and adjoining to it was a place made for the Earl of Strafford, with a Seat and Room for the Lieutenant of the Tower to be next to him; and places for the Earl's Secretaries, and for his Council to be near him.

The Biſhops were excluded by the Canons of the Church, to be aſſiſtant in Caſes of blood or death; and therefore they abſented themſelves from this Trial.

Anno 1640. Monday 22 March, 1640. was the firſt Day of the Earl's appearing on this Theatre, the King, Queen, and Prince, and divers foreign Lords, and many Ladies with them attending there; the Lords in their Robes, on their Seats, and the Scaffolds full of the Members of the Houſe of Commons, and many others mixed with them.

The Earl was brought to the Bar by the Lieutenant of the Tower, his Habit black, wearing his George in a Gold Chain, his Countenance manly black, his Perſon proper, but a little ſtooping with his Diſtemper, or Habit of his Body, his Behaviour exceeding graceful, and his Speech full of Weight, Reaſon, and Pleaſingneſs.

The Lord high Steward declared to him, That he was called thither to anſwer to the Impeachment of High Treaſon, preferred againſt him by the Commons of England and Ireland: Then his Accuſation was read, and next his Anſwer to it, in which moſt part of that Day being ſpent, the Court aroſe.

The next day Mr. Pym made an Introduction, very rhetorical and ſmart to the Articles; and the firſt ſeven of them were managed as to the Evidence, by Mr. Glynne, and the Proof was, to his ſubverting the fundamental Laws of England and Ireland.

Then a ſealed Paper was produced, which being opened and read, appeared to be ſent from the Parliament of Ireland, declaring that the Commons there had voted the Earl guilty of High Treaſon.

At this the Earl being much tranſported, ſaid, There was a Conſpiracy againſt him to take away his Life.

The Committee of the Houſe of Commons took hold of thoſe words, and required Juſtice from the Lords againſt the Earl, who ſtanding impeached of High Treaſon, accuſed the Parliaments of two Kingdoms of a Conſpiracy againſt him.

Hereupon the Earl falling upon his Knees, humbly craved Pardon for the Inconſiderateneſs of the Expreſſion, proteſting ſeriouſly that he did not thereby intend either Parliament but ſome particular Perſons; and ſo that Matter was paſt over.

Then the Committee offered to the Lords three new Articles to be annexed to the Charge, and deſired that the Earl might preſently give his Anſwer to them: To which the Earl reply'd, That the Proceſs being cloſed, he hoped he ſhould not be ordered to anſwer any adventitious and unexpected Charge without more convenient time aſſigned. But the Lords finding the Articles to be of no great Importance, he was urged to a preſent Anſwer, which he then made to them.

March the 24th, the Committee proceeded upon the Articles of the Charge, and after Glynne had ended his part, Maynard proceeded upon the following Articles, and after him Mr. Palmer managed the enſuing Articles, as to the aggravation of them, and enforcing the Evidence upon them, and his part extended to the ſeven laſt Articles, upon the which I was appointed to manage the Evidence.

Car. 17. Theſe Articles on my part were Matters of a very high nature, and ſome of them, particularly the twenty fourth Article, relating to the deſign of bringing over the Army in Ireland, into Scotland, and ſo to England, to reduce this Kingdom.

I having ſpoken with Sir Henry Vane the elder, and with the other Witneſſes, to the twenty fourth Article, and finding that their Teſtimony would not make good the Matter of that Article, thought it not honourable for the Houſe of Commons to proceed upon an Article whereof they could not make a clear Proof; and thereupon propoſed it to the Committee, to omit that Article in his Proceedings. Car. 17.

The Committee were of the ſame opinion, but upon Sir Walter Earl's undertaking to manage it, they left that Article to him; and when I had enforced the Evidence upon the twenty third Article, I ſat down: and Sir Walter Earl, with much Gravity and Confidence, began to aggravate the Matters in the twenty fourth Article, and the dangerous Conſequence and high Crime in it, and called forth the Witneſſes to prove the Particulars, which he had at large opened.

Some of the Witneſſes were not in England, thoſe of them who came in, being ſworn, ſpake little to the purpoſe, and did not prove the Matter at all of that Article; upon which the Knight was very blank, and out of Countenance. But the Earl of Strafford, who loſt no Advantage of his Defence, riſing up from his Seat, made a low obeiſance (as he was uſed to do) to the Lords, and ſpake to this effect.

My Lords,

I am a poor Gentleman, a Priſoner at the Bar; againſt whom ſeveral Perſons learned in the Laws and of great ability for pleading, and ſtrength of Reaſon, and other noble Perſons of great Parts and Eloquence, have enforced the particular Matters of my Charge; and I had well hoped they had been drawing towards an end. But now (my Lords) unexpectedly a new and great Pleader ſets upon me tired out before, and this noble Knight hath laid a heavy burden indeed upon my Shoulders, he hath opened more heinous Crimes againſt me, than all thoſe Gentlemen who have gone before.

The learned Gentlemen who urged the Matters of the laſt Articles againſt me, when he came to this twenty fourth Article, ſat down, and ſeemed to decline it, and yet he left nothing material which was not urged home by him.

But this noble Knight goes beyond all, and indeed beyond the Article it ſelf, obſerving things not contained in it, and impoſſible to be: And could he have proved this, it had been truly a Miracle. But I humbly beg your Lordſhips pardon, I am not willing to ſpend any of your time impertinently; I ſhall only ſay this, That where nothing is proved againſt me, I know your Lordſhips great Wiſdom and Juſtice will expect no Defence from me.

After the Earl was ſat down, the Lord Digby ſtood up, and in a very witty rhetorical Speech, took off Sir Walter Earl, deſired their Lordſhips to paſs by a Miſtake, that this Article was not intended for Proſecution, as might appear by the Gentleman's declining of it, who managed the former.

He moved, That this twenty fourth Article might be omitted, and their Lordſhips not to receive any farther trouble in the urging of it, or defence to it: and that they would be pleaſed to look upon what that noble Knight had ſaid, but as a Superfœtation.

After the Lord Digby had ſpoken, I preſently roſe up, and (after the Lords had done ſmiling) I proceeded with the twenty fifth Article. The Queen who was preſent at the Trial, inquired who that Knight was, whom the Lord Digby relieved? and being told, his name was Sir Walter Earl, ſhe ſaid, that Water-Dog did bark, but not bite; but the reſt did bite cloſe.

The Earl of Strafford, ſpeaking of the Committee who managed the Evidence againſt him, and particularly of the Lawyers, ſaid to a private Friend, Anno 1641. Friend, that Glynne and Maynard uſed him like Advocates, but Palmer and Whitelocke uſed him like Gentlemen; and yet left out nothing material to be urged againſt him.

When the Committee had gone through all the Articles, they moved, That if the Earl had any thing to ſay farther in his defence, that he might do it: The Earl obtained with difficulty time till the next Morning.

The next Day (both Houſes being met) the Lieutenant of the Tower acquainted them, that the Earl had been extreme ill the laſt Night, of a violent Fit of the Stone, and was not able to come abroad this Day, and humbly deſired their Lordſhips excuſe.

This cauſed them to adjourn to the next Morning, and in the Afternoon ſome of the Lords were ſent from the Houſe, to ſee in what condition the Earl was, who found him ſomewhat recovered, and he hoped ſo as he might attend them the next Day.

Then the Houſes met again, April the 10th, and the Commons deſired liberty to produce an additional Piece of Evidence to the twenty third Article: The Earl craved the ſame liberty for himſelf, concerning ſome Teſtimonies not yet exhibited on his behalf; this the Committee oppoſed, but the Lords thought it equal, and after a warm Debate upon it, the Commons roſe in ſome diſcontent, not ſo much as appointing a day for their next meeting.

April 12. In the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Pym produced a Paper of ſome Notes taken by Secretary Vane, of ſome Opinions delivered at the Council-Table of Junto, May 5. 1640. being the Day that the laſt Parliament was diſſolved; the Diſcovery whereof was thus:

Sir Henry Vane.

Secretary Vane being out of Town, ſent a Letter to his Son Sir Henry Vane the younger, then in London, with the Key of his Study, for his Son to look in his Cabinet, for ſome Papers there to ſend to his Father.

The Son looking over many Papers, among them lighted upon theſe Notes, which being of ſo great Concernment to the Publick, and declaring ſo much againſt the Earl of Strafford, he held himſelf bound in duty and conſcience to diſcover them.

He ſhewed them to Mr. Pym, who urged him, and prevailed with him, that they might be made uſe of in the Evidence againſt the Earl of Strafford, as being moſt material and of great conſequence, in relation to that Buſineſs.

Accordingly they were now produced to the Houſe of Commons, and in the Afternoon at a Conference with the Lords, and the next Day the Earl being brought to Weſtminſter, and both Houſes being met, the Notes were openly read; the Title of them was, No danger of a War with Scotland, if Offenſive, not Defenſive.

Then followed the Opinions interlocutory.

" K. C. How can we undertake offenſive War, " if we have no more Money?

" L. L. Ir. Borrow of the City 100000 l. go on " vigorouſly to levy Ship-money; your Majeſty " having tried the Affection of your People, you " are abſolved and looſe from all Rule of Government, and to do what Power will admit.

" Your Majeſty having tried all Ways, and being refuſed, ſhall be acquitted before God and " Man. And you have an Army in Ireland, that " you may imploy to reduce this Kingdom to " Obedience: for I am confident the Scots cannot hold out five Months.

" L. Arch. You have tried all Ways, and have always been denied, it is now lawful to take it " by force. 17 Car.

" L. Cot. Leagues abroad there may be made " for the Defence of the Kingdom; the lower " Houſe are weary of the King and Church: all " Ways ſhall be juſt to raiſe Money by, in this " inevitable Neceſſity, and are to be uſed, being " lawful.

" L. Arch. For an offenſive, not any defenſive " War.

" L. L. Ir. The Town is full of Lords, put " the Commiſſion of Array on foot, and if any " of them ſtir, we will make them ſmart.

To this the Earl anſwered, " That it were hard " meaſure, for Opinions and Diſcourſes by Privy " Counſellors in a Debate of Council, to be proſecuted under the Notion of Treaſon.

" As to the Words [that the King had an Army in Ireland, to reduce this Kingdom] they " are only proved by the ſingle Teſtimony of one " Man, Secretary Vane, which is not of Validity " enough in Law, in a matter of Debt, much " leſs in Point of Life and Death.

" 2. That the Secretary's Depoſition was exceeding dubious upon two Examinations, he " could not remember any ſuch Words, the third " time, his Teſtimony was not poſitive, but that " I ſpake thoſe Words, or the like, and Words " may be very like in ſound, yet differ much in " ſenſe.

" 3. There were preſent at the Debate but eight " Privy Counſellors; two of them [the Arch-" biſhop, and Secretary Windebank] cannot be " produced: Secretary Vane affirms the Words, I " deny them; four remain for Evidence, Mar-" queſs Hamilton, the Earl of Northumberland, the " Lord Treaſurer, and the Lord Cottington: All " theſe have declared upon their Honours, that " they never heard me ſpeak thoſe Words, nor " any the like.

" 4. Suppoſe I ſpake the Words (which I grant " not) yet cannot the Word (this) rationally imply England, as is yielded on all hands; becauſe " England was not out of the way of Obedience (as " the Earl of Clare well obſerved) and becauſe " there never was any the leaſt Intention of landing the Iriſh Army in England, as the Lords of " the Council are able to atteſt.

This Paper of ſo great Conſequence, was miſſing at the Committee, and by the Earl's Anſwer, ſuppoſed that he had ſeen it, and that it was conveyed to him by ſome of the Committee: And I being in the Chair, and having the Charge and Cuſtody of all the Papers, I was ſuſpected more than others, to have acted this Piece of Treachery.

Great Inquiry and Search was made for the Paper, but it could not then be found: I told them when it was miſſing, and that amongſt ſuch a multitude of Papers as I had in my Cuſtody, it was not eaſy to ſee that I had them all again, when they were brought forth, or any of them called for.

That I never ſhewed this Paper to any, but to the Committee, and knew not who had it, or what was become of it; nor did I convey it, or know of any, that had conveyed it away. But this would not ſerve; the Houſe was acquainted with the miſſing of the Paper, and they ordered, That every one of the Committee ſhould make a ſolemn Proteſtation in the Houſe, that they did not convey it away, nor know what was become of it.

All of us made this Proteſtation, and the Lord Digby with more Earneſtneſs and deeper Imprecations than any of the reſt; yet afterwards at the Anno 1641. Battle of Naſeby, the King's Cabinet being taken, among the Papers in it, was a Copy of theſe Notes, under the Lord Digby's Hand, whereby I was cleared, and the Conveyer of the Paper to the King, and from him to the Earl of Strafford, was fully diſcovered.

The Earl having delivered his Anſwer to the additional Proof, the Lord Steward told him, " That if he had any thing to ſay farther in his " defence, he ſhould proceed, becauſe the Court " intended to prepare Matters for their ſpeedy " Judgment.

Whereupon he made a ſummary Repetition of the ſeveral Parts of his former Defence, and concluded thus.

" It is hard to be queſtioned upon a Law which " cannot be ſhewn, where hath this Fire lain hid " ſo many hundreds of Years, without ſmoke to " diſcover it, till it thus burſt forth to conſume " me and my Children.

" That Puniſhment ſhould precede Promulgati- " on of a Law, to be puniſhed by a Law ſubſe- " quent to the Fact, is extreme hard: What Man " can be ſafe, if this be admitted?

" My Lords, it is hard in another reſpect, that " there ſhould be no Token ſet, by which we " ſhould know this Offence, no Admonition by " which we ſhould avoid it. If a Man paſs the " Thames in a Boat, and ſplit himſelf upon an An- " chor, and no Buoy be floating to diſcover it, " he who oweth the Anchor ſhall make Satis- " faction: but if a Buoy be ſet there, every Man " paſſeth upon his own Peril. Now where is the " Mark, where the Token upon this Crime, to " declare it to be High Treaſon?

" My Lords, Be pleaſed to give that regard to " the Peerage of England, as never to expoſe your " ſelves to ſuch Moot Points, ſuch conſtructive " Interpretations of Laws: If there muſt be a " Trial of Wits, let the ſubject matter be of " ſomewhat elſe, than the Lives and Honours of " Peers.

" It will be Wiſdom for your ſelves, for your " Poſterity, and for the whole Kingdom, to caſt " into the Fire theſe bloody and myſterious Vo- " lumes of conſtructive and arbitrary Treaſon; as " the Primitive Chriſtians did their Books of cu- " rious Arts, and betake your ſelves to the plain " Letter of the Law and Statute, that telleth us, " what is, and what is not Treaſon, without be- " ing more ambitious to be more learned in the " Art of Killing, than our Fore-fathers.

" It is now full two hundred and forty Years, " ſince any Man was touched for this alledged " Crime, to this height, before my ſelf: Let us " not awaken theſe ſleeping Lions, to our de- " ſtructions, by taking up a few muſty Records, " that have lain by the Walls ſo many Ages for- " gotten, or neglected.

" May your Lordſhips pleaſe, not to add this " to my other Misfortunes; let not a Precedent " be derived from me ſo diſadvantageous, as this " will be in the Conſequence to the whole King- " dom. Do not through me wound the Inte- " reſt of the Commonwealth; and however " theſe Gentlemen ſay, they ſpeak for the Com- " monwealth: yet in this particular, I indeed " ſpeak for it, and ſhew the Inconveniences and " Miſchiefs that will fall upon it.

" For as it is ſaid in the Statute, 1 H. 4. No " Man will know what to do, or ſay, for fear of " ſuch Penalties.

" Do not put (my Lords) ſuch Difficulties upon " Miniſters of State, that Men of Wiſdom, of Ho- " nour, and of Fortune, may not with Chearful- " neſs and Safety be imployed for the Publick, if " you weigh and meaſure them by Grains and " Scruples, the publick Affairs of the Kingdom " will lie waſt, no Man will meddle with them, " who hath any thing to loſe. 17 Car.

" My Lords, I have troubled you longer than I " ſhould have done, were it not for the Intereſt of " theſe dear Pledges a Saint in Heaven hath left " me.

At this Word, he ſtopt a while, letting fall ſome Tears at her Memory, then he went on.

" What I forfeit my ſelf, is nothing; but that " my Indiſcretion ſhould extend to my Poſterity, " woundeth me to the very Soul.

" You will pardon my Infirmity, ſomething I " ſhould have added, but am not able, therefore " let it paſs.

" And now (my Lords) for my ſelf, I have been, " by the Bleſſing of Almighty God, taught, That " the Afflictions of this preſent Life, are not to be com- " pared to the eternal Weight of Glory, which ſhall be " revealed hereafter.

" And ſo (my Lords) even ſo, with all Tran- " quillity of Mind, I freely ſubmit my ſelf to your " Judgment, and whether that Judgment be of " Life or Death.

Te Deum laudamus.

Certainly never any Man acted ſuch a Part, on ſuch a Theatre, with more Wiſdom, Conſtancy, and Eloquence, with greater Reaſon, Judgment, and Temper, and with a better Grace in all his Words and Geſtures, than this great and excellent Perſon did; and he moved the Hearts of all his Auditors (ſome few excepted) to Remorſe and Pity.

After he had done, Pym and Glynne endeavoured to aggravate his Offences, and ſo both Houſes roſe.

The Commons thought fit to juſtify their Charge by Law, to be Treaſon. To which effect, Mr. St. John, one of the Committee, made an elaborate and learned Argument.

It was inſiſted upon amongſt many other things, That in the Statute 25 E. III. the Index of Treaſon is a Salvo, that becauſe all particular Treaſons could not be then defined; therefore what the Parliament ſhould declare to be Treaſon in time to come, ſhould be puniſhed as Treaſon.

Council for Strafford.

April 17. The Point in Law was argued for the Earl by Mr. Lane the Prince's Attorney; Mr. Loe, Mr. Gardiner, and Mr. Lightfoot were alſo preſent of his Council.

Mr. Lane argued upon the Statute 25 E. III. That it was a declarative Law, not to be extended by Equity, Conſequence, or Conſtruction, but by the expreſs Letter only; and being a Penal Law, admitted no Inferences; Penalties being to enforce Obedience to known Laws, not to doubtful or conjectural.

As to the Salvo, he ſaid, That 6 H. VIII. 4. a Petition was preferred by the Lords, to have all Treaſons limited by Statute, and in that Parliament chap. 20. an Act was made, whereby that Salvo in 25 E. III. was repealed, and nothing to be Treaſon, but what was literally comprehended in the Statute 25 E. III.

Bill of Attainder.

After this, a Bill was brought into the Houſe of Commons, to attaint the Earl of high Treaſon; upon Debate whereof, they voted him guilty of high Treaſon: And 19 April, upon the Ingroſſment of the Bill, it endured a ſharp Debate.

The

Anno 1641. The Lord Digby, and divers others, appearing eminently for the Earl againſt the Bill; but upon diviſion of the Houſe, the Bill was paſſed: yet there were fifty nine Diſſenters. This was 21. April, and the ſame Afternoon it was ſent up to the Lords.

April 24. The Lords were put in mind to appoint a Day for the reading of the Bill of Attainder; and 29 April Mr. St. John by command of the Houſe of Commons, in the Preſence of the Lord Strafford, offered to the Lords, Reaſons and Authorities to ſatisfy them, and to juſtify the Bill by Law.

1. For removing Papiſts from Court.
2. For diſarming of them generally.
3. For disbanding the Iriſh Army.

The King's Anſwer. To which the King gave Anſwer.

1. That all knew the legal Truſt the Crown had in that particular; that he would uſe it ſo, as not to give juſt cauſe of Scandal.

2. He was content it ſhould be done by Law.

3. Upon Conſultation, he found many Difficulties therein; and ſo wiſhed the disbanding of all Armies: as he did conjure them ſpeedily and heartily to join with him, in disbanding thoſe two here, Scots and Engliſh.

May 1. The King called both Houſes of Parliament together, and did paſſionately deſire of them, not to proceed ſeverely againſt the Earl, whom he anſwered for, as to moſt of the main Particulars of the Charge againſt him; tells them, that in Conſcience he cannot condemn the Earl of high Treaſon; and that neither fear, nor any other reſpect, ſhould make him go againſt his Conſcience.

But for Miſdemeanours, he is ſo clear in them, that he thinks the Earl not fit hereafter to ſerve him, or the Commonwealth, in any Place of Truſt, no not ſo much as a Conſtable.

May 2. The Marriage was ſolemnized at Court, between the young Prince of Orange, and the Princeſs Mary the King's Daughter.

This Day, being Sunday, from ſome Pulpits it was preached to the People, the Neceſſity of Juſtice upon ſome great Delinquents now to be acted. And Tumult. the next Morning, May 3. a Rabble of about ſix thouſand out of the City, came thronging down to Weſtminſter, with Swords, Cudgels, and Staves, crying out for Juſtice againſt the Earl of Strafford; pretending decay of Trade, and want of Bread.

They applied themſelves to the Earl of Montgomery, who gave them good Words, and endeavoured to pacify them; which is the beſt way in popular Tumults, and yet this Multitude were very rude with ſome of the Lords; and they poſted up at Weſtminſter, the Names of all thoſe Members of the Houſe of Commons who had voted for the Earl, and called them Straffordians.

This being informed to the Houſe, by ſome who were named in that Liſt, as a high breach of the Privilege of Parliament, yet being the Act of a Multitude, no Redreſs was endeavoured. Theſe Tumults were accompanied with an Information Practices upon the Army. of ſome Practice in the North, to diſtract the Engliſh Army, and to debauch them againſt the Parliament.

Theſe Paſſages occaſioned a Debate in the Houſe Proteſtation. of Commons, about a National Proteſtation, to maintain the Proteſtant Religion againſt Popery, the King's Perſon, the Power of Parliament, and the Rights and Liberties of the Subject. 17 Car.

May 5. This Proteſtation was taken by the Commons Houſe, the next Day by the Lords; and ordered to be generally taken by all the People of England.

The Houſe of Commons then took in debate the raiſing of Moneys, to ſatisfy thoſe great Accounts of the two Armies, with which the Kingdom was ſo highly burthened; wherein a Lancaſhire Knight offered to procure his Majeſty 650000 l. till the Subſidies ſhould be raiſed, if he would paſs a Bill, Not to prorogue, adjourn, or diſſolve this Parliament, without Conſent of both Houſes, to endure till the Grievances were redreſſed, and to give the Parliament Credit to take up Moneys. Bill for continuing the Parliament.

This was well liked by many Parliament-men, who upon the paſſing of ſuch a Bill, would ſit the ſurer and the longer in their Saddles; and they were ſo hot upon it, that the ſame Afternoon they made a Committee, to bring in ſuch a Bill the next Morning, and I was named to draw the Bill.

Of forty five Lords, twenty ſix voted the Earl guilty of high Treaſon, upon the fifteenth Article, For levying Money in Ireland by force, in a warlike manner. And upon the nineteenth Article, For impoſing an Oath upon the Subjects in Ireland. Strafford voted guilty.

The Bill for continuance of the Parliament was brought into the Houſe, the next Morning after it was propounded, and the ſame Day it was perfected, and paſt the Houſe of Commons.

This Bill, and the Act of Attainder, being both paſt by the Commons, a Conference was had with the Lords after they had paſſed them; and a Meſſage ſent by ſome Lords to the King, to intreat his Anſwer, who promiſed to ſatisfy them within two Days.

The King being much perplexed upon the tendring of theſe two Bills to him, between the Clamours of a diſcontented People, and an unſatisfied Conſcience; he took Advice (as ſome reported) of ſeveral of the Biſhops, and of others his intimate Counſellors, what to do in this intricate Affair: and that the major Part of them urged to him the Opinions of the Judges, that this was Treaſon, and the Bill legal.

They preſſed likewiſe the Votes of the Parliament, That he was but one Man, that no other Expedient could be found out to appeaſe the enraged People, and that the Conſequences of a furious Multitude would be very terrible.

Upon all which they perſuaded him to paſs the Bills.

But the chief Motive was ſaid to be, a Letter of the Earl of Strafford, then ſent unto him, wherein the gallant Earl takes notice of theſe things, and what is beſt for his Majeſty in theſe Straits, and to ſet his Conſcience at liberty: He doth moſt humbly beſeech him for prevention of ſuch Miſchief as may happen by his refuſal, to paſs the Bill, to remove him out of the way, towards that bleſſed Agreement which God (I truſt) ſhall for ever eſtabliſh betwixt you and your Subjects. Sir, my Conſent herein, ſhall more acquit you to God, than all the World can do beſides: To a willing Man there is no Injury done. Letter from Strafford to the King.

If not baſe betraying of their Maſter by theſe Paſſages, and by ſome private Dealings, the King was perſuaded to ſign a Commiſſion to three Lords, to paſs theſe two Bills; and that he ſhould ever be brought to it, was admired by moſt of his Subjects, as well as by Foreigners: Himſelf ingeniouſly acknowledgeth the Grounds of doing this, and his Error therein, in his excellent Eikon Baſil. chap. 5.

After

Anno 1641. After he had ſigned theſe Bills, the King ſent Secretary Carleton to the Earl, to acquaint him with what was done, and the Motives of it, eſpecially the Earl's Conſent, who ſeriouſly asked the Secretary, whether his Majeſty had paſſed the Bill, or not? as not believing without ſome aſtoniſhment, that the King would have done it.

And being again aſſured that it was paſt, he roſe up from his Chair, lift up his Eyes to Heaven, laid his Hand on his Heart, and ſaid, Put not your Truſt in Princes, nor in the Sons of Men, for in them there is no Salvation.

Cenſures. Great Cenſures (as in all great Buſineſſes) were paſt upon the King's paſſing of both theſe Bills, That the one was againſt his moſt faithful Servant, and the other againſt himſelf.

Certainly he had great remorſe thereupon; and the next Day, May 11. he ſent a Letter by the Prince to the Lords, written all with his own Hand, That they would confer with the Houſe of Commons to ſpare the Life of the Earl, and that it would be a high Contentment to him.

Some did not ſtick to ſay, that this was promiſed to him, before he ſigned the Bill of Attainder, and to bring him to it. But now the Lords Houſe did not think fit to conſent to his Majeſty's Deſire therein.

May 12. The Earl was brought to the Scaffold on Tower-hill; as he paſſed by, he looked up to the Window where the Archbiſhop lay, who ſpake to him with Comfort and Courage.

He made on the Scaffold a moſt ingenious, charitable, and pious Speech and Prayers; gave ſome Directions touching his Children; and died with Charity, Courage, and general Lamentation.

Thus fell this Noble Earl, who for natural Parts and Abilities, and for Improvement of Knowledge by Experience, in the greateſt Affairs, for Wiſdom, Faithfulneſs, and Gallantry of Mind, hath left few behind him, that may be ranked equal with him.

The Deſign for the Earl's Eſcape out of the Tower, was related to be diſcovered by three Women, who peeping and hearkning to the Diſcourſe of the Earl, with Captain Billingſley, they at the Key-hole of the Earl's Gallery-door, heard them confer about the falling down of the Ship to take in the Earl: and Billingſley brought a Warrant from the King, with two hundred Men to be received into the Tower, for the ſafety of it; but Balfour. Sir William Balfour the Lieutenant refuſed to admit them, ſuſpecting that they came to further the Earl's Eſcape.

Balfour confeſſed that two thouſand Pounds were offered him, to conſent to the Earl's eſcape; and the Earl himſelf did not deny a Deſign, which he ſaid, was only for his remove to ſome other Caſtle: But Balfour was true to the Intereſt of his Country-men, the Covenanters, and their Friends in Parliament.

Great Officers reſign their Places. Divers great Officers of State reſigned up their Places, either accounting themſelves inſecure, or to ſatify others.

May 17. The Lord Cottington gave up his Place of Maſter of the Wards, which the Lord Say had conferred on him.

Biſhop Juxon reſigned his Office of Treaſurer, and five Commiſſioners were appointed to execute it for the time.

The Earl of Leiceſter was made Lieutenant of Ireland.

Marqueſs Hertford Governour to the Prince, and the Earl of Eſſex was made Lord Chamberlain of the King's Houſe.

The Field Officers and Commanders of the Engliſh Army were at London, and ſome of them Members of both Houſes, the Army was left to the care of Sir Jacob Aſhley: And the diſlikes between the King and Parliament, with the ſupply of the Scots Army, and neglect of the Engliſh, cauſed diſcontent in the Engliſh Officers, and pri- Diſcontents in the Army. vate Meetings and Conſultations, which were diſcovered: and the Deſign not brought to a head, was cruſhed. 17 Car.

June 19. It was voted that the Scots ſhould receive 100000 l. of the 300000 l. The Scots by a Paper pretended neceſſity of 25000 l in preſent. The Parliament took off 10000 l. of 50000 l. which they had appointed for the Engliſh Army, and order it for the Scots.

The Lord Piercy, Commiſſary Wilmot, and Aſhburnham (Members of the Parliament) ſitting together and murmuring at it, Wilmot ſtept up, and ſaid, That if ſuch Papers of the Scots could procure Moneys, he doubted not but the Officers of the Engliſh would ſoon do the like. And this cauſed the Engliſh Army to ſay, that the Parliament had diſobliged them.

The Officers put themſelves into a Junto of Officers Petition. ſworn Secrecy, drew up ſome Heads by way of Petition to the King and Parliament, For Money for the Army.

Not to Disband before the Scots.

To preſerve Biſhops Votes and Functions.

To ſettle the King's Revenue.

The Army tainted from hence, met, and drew up a Letter, or Petition, which was ſhewed to the King, and approved, and ſigned by him with C. R. and a Direction to Captain Leg, that none ſhould ſee it but Sir Jacob Aſhley; the main drift was, That the Army might be called up to attend the ſafety of the King's Perſon, and Parliament's ſecurity, or that both Armies might be disbanded.

Mr. Thomas a Member of the Houſe of Commons made a ſharp and hiſtorical Speech againſt Biſhops, and concluded it with his Opinion, for the unlawfulneſs of their ſitting in Parliament any longer. Mr. White did ſecond him, and divers others declared the like Opinion againſt Biſhops.

The Commons had Debate about a new Form Church-Government. of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction; and July 17. agreed, That every Shire ſhould be a ſeveral Dioceſs, a Preſbytery of twelve Divines in each Shire, and a Preſident as a Biſhop over them; and he with aſſiſtance of ſome of the Presbytery, to ordain, ſuſpend, deprive, degrade and excommunicate.

To have a Dioceſan Synod once a Year, and every third Year a National Synod, and they to make Canons, but none to be binding, till confirmed by Parliament.

The Primate of Armagh offered an Expedient Armagh. for Conjunction in Point of Diſcipline, that Epiſcopal and Presbyterial Government might not be at a far diſtance, but reducing Epiſcopacy to the form of Synodical Government in the ancient Church.

June 22. The Commons preſented to the King Tonnage and Poundage granted. an Act for granting of Tonnage and Poundage to him, which he before took as his due; but by paſſing this Act accepted as a Gift from his People.

The Houſe alſo preſented to the King the Act High Commiſſion Court. Star-Chamber. of Poll-money, for the defraying the Charge of the Armies, and with it, an Act for putting down the high Commiſſion Court, and another Act to put down the Star-Chamber.

July 2. He paſſed the Poll-money, but demurred upon the other two Acts; but being informed of the diſcontent of the Houſe of Commons, becauſe

Anno 1641. cauſe he had not paſſed the other two Bills, he came again, July 6, and paſſed the other two Bills likewiſe.

Queen Mother dies. The Queen Mother went out of England into the Low-countries, and ſhortly after died.

The King acquainted the Parliament with his purpoſe to ſend Sir Thomas Row Ambaſſador to the Emperor, to be preſent at the Diet at Ratisbone, and there to mediate on the behalf of the Prince Elector, and his intent to publiſh a Manifeſto in his own Name about this Buſineſs, to which the Parliament aſſented.

July 5th, The Houſe of Commons had a Report from their Committee of a Charge againſt Dr. Wren. Doctor Wren Biſhop of Ely, and he was voted unworthy, and unfit to hold or exerciſe any Office or Dignity in Church or Commonwealth. And a Meſſage ſent to the Lords, to deſire their Concurrence in a Petition to the King, That he might be removed from his Place and Service: and he was committed to the Tower, and by few pitied.

Another Charge was brought in againſt five Judges, Brampſton, Trevor, Weſton, Davenport, Ship-money Judges. and Crawley; who gave their Opinions for Ship-money; and againſt Judge Berkley for High Treaſon; but he came off by Redemption, as is before remembred.

The Houſe of Commons made an Order, (and Sir Robert Harlow the Executioner of it) to take away all ſcandalous Pictures, Croſſes, and Figures, within Churches and without; and the zealous Knight took down the Croſs in Cheapſide, Charing-Croſs, and other the like Monuments impartially.

The King had given notice of his Purpoſe to go into Scotland, and had ſet the Day to begin his Journey, Auguſt 10, to which both Houſes had agreed: Yet now the Commons deſire him to put off his Journey for a Fortnight, the Affairs of State, and his paſſing of ſome Bills requiring it: But to pleaſe them, the King the ſame day paſſed the Bill for taking away Knighthood-money; and another for making of Gun-powder and Salt-Petre, and ſigned a Commiſſion to divers great Lords, for paſſing of Bills in his Abſence.

Eſſex. He alſo ſigned a Bill for making the Earl of Eſſex General of his Forces on this ſide Trent, with Power to raiſe Forces in caſe of neceſſity: but he refuſed to make the Earl of Pembroke Lord High Steward.

Judge Crooke obtained his Writ of Eaſe upon his own Petition to the King; but the Profits of his Place were continued to him.

After ſome Debate in Parliament, whether the Engliſh or Scotiſh Army ſhould be firſt disbanded; Armies disbanded. it was at laſt agreed, that both of them ſhould be disbanded together: which was done accordingly, Aug. 6, and the Scots with Store of Engliſh Money and Spoils, and the beſt Entertainment, left their warm and plentiful Quarters.

Auguſt 8, Being the Lord's-day, yet the Houſe of Commons thought fit to ſit, for the diſpatch of ſome important Affairs, before the King went out of Town, towards Scotland, which was appointed the Tueſday after; but they printed an Order of Excuſe for their ſitting on that Day, and that it ſhould not be drawn in Precedent.

Parliament adjourn'd. After this the Parliament adjourned to the 20th of October, and a Committee of fifty of the Houſe of Commons was appointed to ſit during the Receſs, with ample Powers.

Hitherto the Calm was not quite blown over, but now hideous Storms began to ariſe, and threaten the long enjoyed Mercies of Peace and Happineſs in this Nation: Diſcontents at Government, Diſtractions of Opinion in Matters of Religion; the whole Kingdom ſeemed to be moulded into a Spirit of Diviſion and Contradiction. 17 Car.

Inſolences and Diſorders unpuniſhed or connived at, mightily increaſed, the Scots Succeſſes animated other Subjects to their illegal Pretences and impious Actions; and in this time of the King's abſence in Scotland, the Iriſh Flames of Rebellion brake forth, having been thus kindled. Iriſh Rebellion.

The laſt Year the Parliament at Dublin ſent a Committee hither, with a Remonſtrance to the King, of their Grievances and Preſſures under the Government of the Earl of Strafford, whom they had accuſed of High Treaſon: The King gave them moſt favourable Anſwers and Redreſſes, and parted with much of his own to give contentment to his Iriſh Subjects.

Mr. Wainsford Deputy there to the Earl of Strafford Lieutenant, being dead, the King by Commiſſion conſtituted the Lord Ditton, and Sir William Parſons in the Government there, but finding Ditton not well liked, he made Sir William Parſons and Sir John Borlace (generally approved) to be the Lords Juſtices there.

Theſe applyed themſelves to give all ſatisfaction to the People, they abated the Subſidies given in Strafford's time, from 40000*l.* to 12000*l.* paſſed an Act of Limitation, much deſired to ſettle all Eſtates for ſixty Years precedent; and another for relinquiſhing the King's Right, found for him by Inquiſition, to four Counties in Connaght, and other Territories.

He declared the Earl of Leiceſter Lord Lieute- Earl of Leiceſter. nant of Ireland, and the Papiſts there were permitted a private Enjoyment of their Religion, and a general good Agreement was had between the Engliſh and Iriſh.

In this Security, the Iriſh Army was disbanded; after which, and in the King's abſence in Scotland, about October 23, there brake forth ſo horrid black and flagitious a Rebellion in Ireland, as cannot be parallel'd in the Stories of any other Nation.

This was fomented and contrived by their Popiſh Prieſts and Lawyers, ſome of their Maxims Iriſh Maxims. in Law were, That any one being ſlain in Rebellion, though found by Record, gave the King no Forfeiture. That though many thouſands were in Arms, and exerciſing the violences of War, yet if they profeſſed not to riſe againſt the King it was no Rebellion. That if one were outlawed for Treaſon, his Heir might reverſe the Outlawry, and be reſtored.

Theſe and the like Tenets they publiſhed in their Parliaments, and endeavoured a Suſpenſion of Poyning's Act, and the Act for annexing that Kingdom to the Crown of England; and aſſumed a Power of Judicature in Criminal and Capital Cauſes to be in their Parliament.

They took advantage of the Scots Succeſſes, of their Favourers in England, and our Diſtractions here, of the disbanding the Army there, and the Death of the Earl of Strafford: They raiſe Forces, give out, that the Queen was in the head of them, and the King was coming with an Army to them, and the Scots had made a League with them: that they were authoriſed by the King's Commiſſion, and aſſerted his Cauſe againſt the Puritans of England.

To their Country-men they ſcatter Advertiſements out of England, of a Statute there lately made, That all Iriſh ſhall come to the Proteſtant Worſhip, on pain of loſs of Goods for the firſt Offence, of Lands for the ſecond, and of Life for the third Offence.

They give them hope to recover their Liberties and ancient Cuſtoms, to ſhake off the Engliſh Yoke, Anno 1641. Yoke, to have a King of their own Nation, and to poſſeſs Goods and Eſtates of the Engliſh.

Motives. Theſe Motives they publiſhed in Print, That the King and Queen were curbed by the Puritans, and their Prerogatives aboliſhed, which theſe (as loyal Subjects) take to heart; and that the Catholick Religion is ſuppreſſed in England, and the Catholicks there perſecuted with all rigour, even to death, and that the Puritans in Ireland have threatned to do the ſame there.

That in Ireland the Catholicks are made uncapable of any Office, to the decay of them in their Eſtates, Education, and Learning. That the Government of their Country is in the hand of Strangers, who come thither poor and mean, yet ſoon riſe to wealth and honour by oppreſſing the Natives.

That there have been threatnings to ſend Forces to compel the Conſciences of the Iriſh, and to cut their Throats: and that the Catholicks are not allowed to have any Arms or Ammunition, but the Proteſtants and Puritans may. Upon all which they ſaw no way, but to attempt to ſeize upon Arms where they could get them; to ſave their Lives, maintain the King and Queen, their Religion and Country.

Upon theſe pretences, and manifeſt untruths, they ground their taking up of Arms.

The firſt ſuſpicion whereof was by Sir William Cole, who about Octob. 11, wrote to the Lords Juſtices, of great reſort to Sir Phelim Oneale, and to the Lord Macquierre, and they were exceeding buſy about diſpatches.

About October 21, he wrote another Letter to them, of what ſome Iriſh had revealed to him, of a deſign to ſeize the Caſtle of Dublin, to murther the Lords Juſtices, and Council, and all the Proteſtants there, and throughout the Kingdom: But this Letter came not to their Hands.

Owen O Conelly. When many of the Conſpirators were come to Dublin, and met there at a Tavern; one Owen O Conelly an Iriſh-man, but a true Proteſtant, came to Sir William Parſons about nine a Clock at Night, with a broken relation of a great Conſpiracy to ſeize the Caſtle the next Morning, and that Mac Mahon who was one of them, had told him ſo much.

Parſons ſeeing Conelly diſtempered with drink, gave the leſs credit to his relation, but wiſhed him to return to Mac Mahon, to get out of him what he could farther of the Plot, and to return to him again that Night. Yet he did not ſo ſlight the Information, but that ſecretly he ordered ſtrong Guards in ſeveral Places, and aſſembled the Council, where they expected the return of Conelly, who coming to them, was ſeized on by the Guards, who had carried him to Priſon, and ſo prevented the diſcovery of the Plot, had not a Servant of Sir William Parſons accidentally come by and reſcued Conelly, and brought him ſomewhat recovered of his drinking unto the Lords Juſtices and Council, who confeſſed that a few days before, upon Letters from Mac Mahon, he went to meet him at Connaght, but he being gone to Dublin, Conelly followed him thither; and they two went to the Lodging of the Lord Macquierre, that by the way Mac Mahon told Conelly, that this Night there would be a great number of Iriſh Noblemen Papiſts in Dublin, who with himſelf would take the Caſtle by Morning, then force the City by the Ordnance, and deſtroy all the Proteſtants, and ſo divers others were ordered in all parts of the Kingdom, to ſeize and deſtroy all the Engliſh at an Hour deſigned; viz. To-morrow by ten a Clock, and that no poſting nor ſpeed could prevent it. 17 Car.

That Conelly moved Mac Mahon to diſcover it rather to the State, to prevent the miſchief. But he anſwered, He could not help it, yet that they owned their Allegiance to the King, and pay it to him: but what they did was againſt the tyrannical Government over them, and to imitate Scotland, who got their Privilege by that courſe.

And Mac Mahon ſwore that they would not part, but go together to the Caſtle, and if this Matter were diſcovered, ſome Body ſhould die for it. Mac Mahon.

Whereupon, Conelly feigned ſome neceſſity of eaſement to go out of the Chamber, left his Sword in Pawn, and Mac Mahon's Man came down with him into the Yard; where in a Trice he leaped over a Wall, and two Pales, and ſo came to the Lord Juſtice Parſons.

Examined Octob. 22, 1641.

Owen O Conelly.

Preſently upon this, the Juſtices ſent, and ſeized Mac Mahon and his Man; and they before the Council confeſſed all the Plot, That on that very day, all the Forts and Caſtles in Ireland would be ſurprized, that he and Mac Guire and Hugh Bim, Brian Oneale and others 20 out of each County, were to ſurprize Dublin Caſtle.

That all the Nobility and Gentry Papiſts, were Confederates herein, and however they uſed him now in their Power, his Blood would be revenged.

Then Mac Guire and others, were ſuddenly ſeized on; and the Town filling with ſtrangers, the Council removed into the Caſtle, upon the Rumor hereof, Bim and Moore, and others, chief of the Conſpirators eſcaped, and divers others, who found Friends to help them; but about fourty of the meaner ſort of them were taken.

The next day the Lords Juſtices proclaimed this diſcovery, and that all good Subjects ſhould betake themſelves to their Defence, and to adverti ſe them of all Occurences, and that no levies of Men be made for Foreign ſervice. The ſame Night the Lord Blaney arrived with the news of the Surpriſal of his Houſe, his Wife and Children by the Rebells.

This execrable Rebellion began in Ulſter, and every Day and Hour, ill news came of fearful Maſſacres upon the Engliſh; which increaſed a fear of the like at Dublin, by the Papiſts there.

The Council ſeized upon what Money they could, ſome Artillery, Arms for 10000 Men, 1500 Barrels of Powder, and Match, and Lead, ſtored by the Earl of Strafford. The old Army was but 2297 Foot, and 943 Horſe, and theſe diſperſed; Yet the Council ſent to ſeveral Gariſons to march to Dublin.

They diſpatched Letters to the King in Scotland, and to the Lord Lieutenant in London, of the Rebellion, and the ſtate of the Kingdom, and the ſmall number of their Forces, they pray Supplies, and that Conelly the Diſcoverer, and Meſſenger may be rewarded. All their Diſpatches were ſent by Sea, the Rebells having ſtopped the Land Paſſages.

The

Anno 1640. The Lords of the Engliſh Pale repair to the Council, offer their Faith and Service, and the Rebels in Ulſter, by the latter end of October, had poſſeſt themſelves of almoſt all that Province. Such Engliſh as had gotten into any Places of ſtrength able to endure a Siege, yet upon good terms rendring themſelves, were ſure to be murdered in cold Blood; Men, Women and Children.

And for the Scots they profeſſed they would (and did indeed) ſpare them; that they might the more eaſily ſwallow them up afterwards.

O Neale. Phelim O Neale, a Man but of mean Parts, or Courage, was their General he was of near alliance to the late Earl of Tirone, bred in England a Student in Lincoln's-Inn, and, till of late, a Proteſtant; lived lazily, till now elected by his Countrymen to be their Leader.

He, with a numerous Rabble, marched to Liſnagamy near the Scots and fell upon them without Mercy, with other Forces he came up into the Pale, took in Dondalke, then marched to Ardee, ſeven Miles from Tredah.

The news from Dublin was poſted to Tredah, and there encountred with news of the Treacherous Surpriſal of divers Caſtles in the North.

The Lord Moore brought ſome Horſe to the Town, whither he came to eſcape the Rebels.

The Town drew out ſome old Pieces, ſcoured and planted them; and four out of a Merchants Ship with ſome Powder, and Captain Gibſon commanded there, Sir Faithful Forteſcue leaving his Charge. Some Forces ſallied out upon the Rebels, and got from them (who haſtily fled away) ſome Plunder, and Cows, and 80 Priſoners, whereof ſix only were hanged.

Many treacherous deſigns of the Town Papiſts failed; Sir Henry Titchburne came to be Governor with 100 Horſe, and 1000 Foot, not without ſome jealouſy of the Proteſtants.

There was dropped in the Streets a Declaration of the Catholicks of Ireland, framed upon preſumption that the deſign had been effected, and to the like purpoſe as is before remembred.

The firſt Letters of the Buſineſs from the Lords Juſtices and Council arrived at London the laſt of October, and were delivered that Evening.

Next Morning, the Lords Houſe ſent them down to the Houſe of Commons by the Lord Keeper, Lord Privy Seal, and 14 other Lords, who had Chairs in the Houſe, and ſat while the Letters were read, and then departed.

The Houſe preſently reſolved into a Committee and ordered.

Votes. That 50000 l. be forthwith provided.

The Lords to be moved that Members of both Houſes ſhould move the City of London to lend this Money.

That a Committee of both Houſes conſider of the Affairs of Ireland.

None but Merchants to paſs without Certificate to Ireland.

To all which the Lords agreed.

They voted many other particulars in order to Supplies for Ireland, and a Pardon to be offered.

The Lords Juſtices, and Council in Ireland, neglected no means in their Power by fortifying Dublin, and other Caſtles and Places, and making Proviſions for Defence againſt the Rebels, they alſo granted out Commiſſions to divers Noblemen and Gentlemen, and ſome of them Papiſts (whom they in prudence thought not fit yet to ſuſpect) though they afterwards joined in the Rebellion with the reſt. 17 Car.

They alſo delivered Arms to many of them, who employed them to cut the Throats of the Engliſh, ſuch were the Lord Gormanſtone and others, and by the midſt of November ſeveral Counties declared for the Iriſh Papiſts and Rebels in Leimſter, and other Provinces; the miſerable Engliſh Proteſtants, Men, Women and Children whom they took were moſt ſavagely butchered by the Papiſts with ſuch Cruelty and Tortures, not ſparing any Age or Sex, and with ſuch Scoffs and Blaſphemies, at their Sufferings, Torments and Death, that they were hardly outdone by the moſt barbarous Heathen Perſecutors of the primitive Chriſtians, or by Bonner and his Fellows, and thoſe who fled from them came to Dublin for Succour; where wanting Relief they periſhed, ſo that the publick Burying Places would not contain their dead Bodies.

The Lord Ormond and ſeveral others, came with ſome Forces to Dublin. The Members of the Iriſh Parliament were diſcontented that it had been adjourned for ſo long a time as next February, to pleaſe them; they were called together for one Day, to make their Proteſtation againſt the Rebellion, there was but a thin meeting of them, and but a faint Proteſtation againſt the Rebels, the Popiſh Members not enduring to have it called a Rebellion, but traiterous and rebellious Actions of ſome Perſons; againſt which they proteſted.

They ſent Commiſſioners to treat with the Rebels in the North, who tore the Order of Parliament, and returned a ſcornful Anſwer.

The Lord Ditton, and the Lord Taff coming for London, were committed, and their Papers ſeized, and they afterwards were great with the King.

I received Letters from my Uncle Judge Crooke, wherein he thanked me for the Intelligence I gave him concerning Parliament Buſineſs, and deſired the continuance of it, and eſpecially to know what Proceedings were againſt the Judges or Biſhops, and deſired me to uſe my beſt Manner amongſt the Lords and Commons, that they might have as eaſy a Cenſure as might be, for admonition as ſhall be conceived fitteſt, they having received already a long diſgrace and diſprofit, eſpecially for my Lord Chief Juſtice Bramſton, and my Brother Weſton, for my Brother Weſton I conceive erred more in Judgment than in Will, and my Lord Chief Juſtice, I perſuade my ſelf, having an honeſt Heart, but too much Policy, ſeeking to pleaſe King and People, wherein he pleaſed neither, for he expreſly ſeemed to be of my Opinion after I had argued, and well allowed of it.

My Brother in Law Sir Thomas Moſtyn died at his Houſe at Kilken in Flintſhire.

Upon receipt of the news of the Rebellion in Ireland, the King was much troubled, and being at that diſtance from his Parliament in England, he ſent expreſſes to them, and referred the whole management of the Iriſh Buſineſs to his Parliament at London.

November 20, The Lords Juſtices, and Council in Ireland ſent a more particular account to the Lord Lieutenant here, of the Iriſh Affairs; he returned anſwer "That he had acquainted the "King at Edinburgh, with all their Diſpatches; "and that his Majeſty had referred the Iriſh "Buſineſs and management of the War there to "his Parliament of England.

Anno 1641. Some talked broadly of the Earl of Leiceſter's retarding ſo long his Service of Lieutenant of Ireland, eſpecially in ſuch a time as then.

He was now pleaſed to commiſſionate the Earl of Ormond to be his Deputy, which was afterwards confirmed by the King; but many wondred that the Earl did not go in his own Perſon.

Some Members of the Parliament in Ireland, and moſt of the Papiſts even in the Pale, and generally in all Places, took part with the Rebels: The Lord Moore ſtood faithful to his King and Religion.

The Rebels to be revenged on him, ſent about a thouſand Men to his Houſe three Miles from Tredah, the Forces in the Houſe were but twenty four Foot, and fifteen Horſe, beſides ſome few Servants, and they had but ſix Shots of Powder a-piece, yet when the Rebels aſſaulted them, they killed 140 of them.

All their Powder being ſpent, and then ſome of their ſmall number ſlain, they yielded upon Quarter; yet the Rebels threw them out at the Windows, an old Gentleman they ran through the Body, cut the Throat of an old blind Man, ſtripped all the Women, plundred the Houſe of all the Goods, and ſo left it.

From Dublin they ſent ſix hundred Foot to ſupply Tredah, two thouſand of the Rebels waited for them to intercept them, and the Engliſh in a Fog came within Musket-ſhot of them before they were deſcried; then the Captain commanded a Counter-march, in which the Engliſh were forced to take a Ditch, which the Enemies thinking to be a Flight, they ſhouted, and that ſo amazed and confounded the Engliſh, that the Rebels charging them, ſlew moſt of them near Gilling ſton-Bridge.

The Lord Ormond's Troop of fifty Horſe made their way through without loſs of a Man; but by this Defeat the Rebels got ſtore of Arms and Moneys, and much encouragement.

The Maſter of a Cheſter Bark, laden with Arms and Money for Dublin, betrayed all to the Rebels, who now were ſet down before Tredah, and all the Popiſh Lords and Gentlemen within the Pale joined with them.

The King's Return from Scotland. About the latter end of November, the King returned from Scotland; he was ſumptuouſly feaſted at London by the Citizens, and he banquetted them at Hampton Court, and made divers of the Aldermen Knights.

Speech in Parliament. Decemb. 2, He came to both Houſes of Parliament, and told them, He had made as much haſte from Scotland, as thoſe Affairs permitted, in which he had ſo good Succeſs, that he had left that Nation a moſt peaceable and contented People. That he doth not find this Nation ſo ſettled as he expected, but full of Jealouſies and Alarms of Deſigns and Plots, that Guards have been ſet to defend both Houſes. That he doubts not of his Subjects Affections to him by his reception at his return; and mentions his own Affection to his People, and ſo far from repenting of what he had done for them, that he was willing to paſs any thing more that might juſtly be deſired for their Liberties, and for maintenance of Religion: Recommends to them the Buſineſs of Ireland, the preparations for it going on but ſlowly.

Proclamation. Then he ſets forth a Proclamation, For obedience to the Laws concerning Religion, and that none introduce any Rite or Ceremony, other than thoſe eſtabliſhed by Law.

At this time, this was not held by many to be very ſeaſonable, and divers were offended at it. He alſo publiſhed a Proclamation for all the Members of Parliament, To repair to the Houſes by a day. And Decemb. 14, He again ſpake to both Houſes, To quicken them in the Buſineſs of Ireland, expreſſeth his deteſtation of all Rebellion, particularly of this; and offers his Pains, Power and Induſtry, to contribute to that neceſſary Work of reducing the Iriſh to Obedience. 17 Car. Speech.

That for the Bill for preſſing of Soldiers, lodged with the Lords, if it came to him he promiſeth to paſs it: And becauſe ſome had ſtarted the Queſtion into a Diſpute concerning the bounds of the King's Prerogative herein, he offers to avoid ſuch Debate, that the Bill ſhall paſs with a Salvo jure, both for King and People: And concludes, conjuring them by all that is, or can be dear to them, or him, to haſten with ſpeed the Buſineſs of Ireland.

Parliament petition. Upon this the Parliament petition the King touching the Privilege of Parliament their Birthright, declaring with all duty, that the King ought not to take notice of any Matter in agitation and debate in either Houſe, but by their information; nor ought to propound any Condition, or Proviſion, or Limitation, to any Bill or Act in debate or preparation, or to manifeſt or declare his Conſent or Diſſent, Approbation or Diſlike, before it be preſented in courſe; nor ought to be diſpleaſed with any Debate of Parliament, they being Judges of their own Errors and Offences, in debating Matters depending.

That theſe Privileges have beeen broken of late in the Speech of his Majeſty, Decemb. 14, particularly mentioning the Bill of Impreſs; offering alſo a proviſional Clauſe, by a Salvo jure before it was preſented: and withal they take notice of his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure againſt ſuch as moved a queſtion concerning the ſame.

They deſire to know the Names of ſuch Perſons as ſeduced his Majeſty to that Item, that they may be puniſhed as his Great Council ſhall adviſe his Majeſty.

Divers indifferent Men wondered both at the King's Speech, which gave the cauſe of Exception, and was indeed notoriouſly againſt the Courſe and Privilege of Parliament, that his Council ſhould not inform him thereof: And they alſo apprehended this Petition ſomewhat too rough in the Expreſſions of it to their King; but the general Fate of things drove on this way, to increaſe the Jealouſies betwixt King and People; and God was pleaſed ſo to order it, to bring to paſs what he had determined.

The Parliament reſolve not to proceed in their Affairs, till they had a ſatisfactory Anſwer to their Petition; and ſome of them were jealous of too much favour to the Iriſh Rebellion, by ſome about the King, and divers went yet higher.

The King with ſome regret withdraws to Hampton Court, hoping by his abſence to avoid Exceptions, but this increaſeth diſcontent in the Parliament, who the next Day appoint a Committee to follow him thither; and now they ſpeak plainly, That the whole frame of Government is out of order.

Grievances of the Court-Marſhal. Among other Grievances, Complaint was made by ſeveral Perſons, of the great prejudice and wrong to the Subject, by the illegal Proceedings of the Court-Marſhal, and the ſupercilious, magiſterial and illegal exerciſe of Earl Marſhal, by the Earl of Arundel. Mr. Hyde, Mr. Palmer, Mr. Maynard, my ſelf, and others, had Conference about it, and reſolved to put it on in the Houſe of Commons; Mr. Hyde ſpake to it ſmartly and ingeniouſly.

Hyde. He called thoſe Proceedings, A piece of Pageantry, ſhewed the illegality of them, and the vexation

Anno 1641. tion to the Subject by Attendance and Expence, many times for a haſty Word, whereof the Law of England takes no notice, nor gives any Action for them: Yet in this Court People are ſummoned, and wait, and are roughly treated. And he moved the Houſe to declare their Senſe of theſe Proceedings, he was ſeconded in this Motion, and the Houſe voted, The Court and their Proceedings to be illegal, and a Grievance: And Mr. Hyde gained credit by it.

The Marqueſſes, Hamilton and Argyle withdrew from the Parliament in Scotland, upon jealouſy of ſome Deſign againſt their Perſons; but upon examination of that Matter by the Parliament there, it was found to be a Miſinformation: yet the ſame took fire in our Parliament, upon the like Surmiſes of ſome; whereupon the Parliament here appointed Guards for London and Weſtminſter, and ſome ſpake not without reflection upon the King himſelf.

Remonſtrance. The Houſe of Commons prepared a Remonſtrance of the State of the Kingdom; wherein they mentioned all the Miſtakes, Misfortunes, Illegalities, and Defaults in Government, ſince the King's coming to the Crown, the evil Counſels and Counſellors, and a malignant Party, that they have no hopes of ſettling the Diſtractions of this Kingdom, for want of a Concurrence with the Lords.

This Remonſtrance was ſomewhat roughly penned, both for the Matter and Expreſſions in it, and met with great Oppoſitions in the Houſe; inſomuch as the Debate of it laſted from Three a Clock in the Afternoon, till Ten a Clock the next Morning; and the ſitting up all Night cauſed many through Weakneſs or Wearineſs to leave the Houſe, and Sir B. R. to compare it to the Verdict of a ſtarved Jury.

Proteſtation. When the Vote was carried, though not by many, to paſs the Remonſtrance, Mr. Palmer and two or three more, made their Proteſtation againſt this Remonſtrance.

At which, thoſe who were for the Remonſtrance, ſpake ſharply againſt this Proteſtation, as a thing directly againſt the Order and Privilege of the Houſe of Commons, and tending to the fruſtrating of all their Proceedings: And it was ſtrongly moved, and ſeconded, and carried upon Palmer. the Queſtion, That Mr. Palmer, and thoſe who had made their Proteſtation againſt the Vote for the Remonſtrance, might be ſent to the Tower which was done the next day.

But after a few Days, and ſome Expences extraordinary, upon his Petition he was releaſed, and took his Place again in the Houſe as formerly.

This Remonſtrance was preſently printed and publiſhed by the Parliament, contrary to the King's Deſire, and before his Anſwer made to it, which came forth ſhortly after, to all the Heads of the Remonſtrance: and a little after that the King cauſed to be printed and publiſhed his Declaration, in Anſwer to the Remonſtrance of the Parliament.

During this time, and taking opportunity from theſe Differences betwixt the King and Parliament, divers of the City of the meaner ſort came Tumults. in great Numbers and Tumults to Whitehall, where with many unſeemly and inſolent Words and Actions, they incenſed the King, and went from thence in like Poſture to Weſtminſter, behaving themſelves with extreme rudeneſs towards ſome of the Members of both Houſes.

This cauſed the King to ſend to the Lord Mayor, to call a Common-Council to receive his Majeſty's Pleaſure which was ſent to them, touching the late riotous Aſſemblies about his Palaces of Whitehall and Weſtminſter, and to command their Care to prevent the like, eſpecially in the enſuing Holy-days, and calls them The unruly People of the Suburbs; but is aſſured of the Affections of the Citizens, and wiſhes them to take care not to be diſturbed by Fears and Jealouſies. 17 Car.

During theſe Diſtractions in England, the Affairs of Ireland lay miſerably bleeding, the Differences between the King and Parliament encouraged the Papiſts in Ireland to proceed to the Execution of their horrid Deſign to maſſacre and extirpate all the Proteſtants in that Kingdom; the Lords of the Pale refuſed to come into the Council upon their Summons, but joining with the other Rebels, form an Army of twenty thouſand, beſides Brigades in ſeveral Provinces.

The Scots propounded to ſend into Ireland ten thouſand of their Country-men, upon ſome conditions, but nothing was effected in it.

Tredah was beſieged by the Rebels by Sea and Land, they ſtile themſelves the Catholick Army, three thouſand of them were defeated by a Party ſallying out of the Town.

The Priſoners taken by the Engliſh were well uſed and pampered by the Popiſh-women in the Town: The Engliſh whom the Rebels took, were crowded into Dungeons, fed with Garbages and Offals, without Salt or Fire, and almoſt ſtarved, ſeldom any of them recovered.

The Rebels ſent a Friar their Ambaſſador into the Town, to demand no leſs than the abſolute Surrender of it for his Majeſty's Uſe and Service, which being with Scorn denied by the Governour, the Friar gave him a Copy of the Oath, which he Iriſh Oath; ſaid the Catholicks had taken, To maintain with their Lives and Fortunes the Exerciſe of the Roman Catholick Religion; To be faithful to the King, and to bring to puniſhment all ſuch as ſhould do any thing contrary to this Oath.

The Governour hereupon framed an Oath to be taken by the Soldiers and Towns-men, To defend the Town, to diſcover any Plot, and not to conſent to deliver up the Town: Which Oath the Mayor and Aldermen of the Town, and others, refuſed to take.

The Soldiers from the Town made ſeveral Sallies upon the Rebels, and ſlew, and took many of them; but their Victuals grew ſcarce, nothing but Herrings and Water, without any Bread; the Cows killed, Firing and Horſe-meat all ſpent; Sickneſs, Famine and Death raged.

Some Relief it pleaſed God to ſend to the Town by Sea; and then the Rebels, by Treachery of the Towns-men, had a Deſign (which they attempted) to ſurprize the Town: but by the Care and Courage of Tichborn the Governour, and thoſe with him, it was prevented.

The Rebels ſtorming the Town, were repulſed, Iriſh Cru- they in other Places executed horrid Tortures up- elties. on the Engliſh, they murthered the Lord Cautfield baſely, hanged one Blaney, tortured a Woman to force her to hear Maſs, drowned many hundreds, Men, Women, and innocent Children in the Rivers, ſome they ſent to Sea in a rotten Veſſel without any Sails or Rudder, to be caſt away, and great Numbers of the Engliſh after they had done all Drudgeries for the Rebels in hopes of Mercy, had all their Throats cut by them; and with ſome of them, the execrable Villains and Monſters would make themſelves Paſtime and Sport, before their death, trying who could hack deepeſt into the Engliſhmens Fleſh; and ſo with the higheſt Torture and Cruelty mangled them to death.

But their Inhumanities to both Sexes, and all Ages, are more than can be numbred or expreſſed. Some of the Engliſh ſallying out upon the Rebels, Anno 1641. ſaw in their way thirty Engliſhmen and Women murthered in Ditches, which ſo enraged them, that they fell upon the Rebels with incredible Fierceneſs, ſlew 300 of them, and brought back good Booties and Priſoners to the Town.

Many ſuch Attempts cauſed the Rebels to raiſe the Siege of Tredah, and in their marching off, they cut the Throats of all the Engliſhmen, Women and Children; they were cloſely purſued by the Lord Moor, and others, and in divers Encounters with them, when, two, three, and four hundred of them were ſlain, yet no one Engliſhman was killed.

Upon Letters of all theſe Paſſages and Debate in the Houſe of Commons, what was fit to be farther done, in order to the ſuppreſſion of this Rebellion, the Houſe thought fit to refer the whole Matter to the Iriſh Committee, to prepare ſome Propoſals to be made to the Houſe, for the effectual Relief of Ireland: But while theſe things were in agitation, there fell out another Interruption to the unhappy Affairs of Ireland.

The Papiſts in Ireland held it no ſmall Policy, and accordingly practiſed it, to put the Proteſtants upon the Deſtruction of one another, whereby the Intereſt and Power of the Papiſts, to perſecute the Proteſtants, might be advanced; for which end they ſtirred up Tumults in England, and then incens'd the King againſt thoſe Tumults. The Papiſts were the more nettled by the Remonſtrance of the Commons of the State of the Kingdom, in which they complain of the Connivance and Favour ſhewed to the Papiſts.

The King being informed that ſome Members of Parliament had private Meetings, and a Correſpondence with the Scots, and countenanced the late Tumults from the City; he gave a Warrant to repair to their Lodgings, and to ſeal up the Trunks, Studies and Chambers of the Lord Kimbolton, Mr. Pym, Mr. Hampden, Mr. Hollis, Sir Arthur Haſlerigge, and Mr. Stroud, which was done; but their Perſons were not met with. The Houſe of Commons having notice hereof whilſt it was in doing, Jan. 3. 1641. they paſt this Vote.

Vote.

" That if any Perſon whatſoever ſhall come to " the Lodgings of any Member of this Houſe, " and offer to ſeal the Trunks, Doors, or Papers " of any of them, or ſeize upon their Perſons; " ſuch Members ſhall require the Aid of the Con- " ſtable, to keep ſuch Perſons in ſafe Cuſtody, " till this Houſe do give farther Order.

" And that if any Perſon whatſoever ſhall offer " to arreſt or detain the Perſon of any Member, " without firſt acquainting this Houſe; That it is " lawful for ſuch Member, or any Perſon to aſ- " ſiſt him, and to ſtand upon his, or their guard " of defence, and to make a reſiſtance, according " to the Proteſtation taken, to defend the Privi- " leges of Parliament.

Articles againſt the five Members.

The King being put to it, cauſed Articles of high Treaſon and other Miſdemeanours to be prepared againſt thoſe five Members; " For endea- " vouring to ſubvert the fundamental Laws and " Government, and deprive the King of his le- " gal Power, and to place on Subjects an arbitra- " ry and tyrannical Power, by foul Aſperſions on " his Majeſty, and his Government, to alienate " the Affections of his People, and to make him " odious.

" To draw his Army to diſobedience, and to " ſide with them in their traiterous Deſigns.

" That they traiterouſly endeavoured to ſub- " vert the very Rights and Being of Parliament. 17 Car.

" Endeavouring to compel the Parliament to " join with them in their traiterous Deſigns: " And to that end have actually raiſed and coun- " tenanced Tumults againſt the King and Parlia- " ment.

The King underſtanding that the Houſe of Commons had voted againſt the Arreſt, or Seiſure of the Perſons of any of their Members; the Papiſts by the Means and Influence of the Queen, as was ſuppoſed, perſuaded the King the next Day in the Morning to come himſelf to the Houſe of Commons, guarded with his Penſioners, and followed by about two hundred of his Courtiers, and Soldiers of Fortune, moſt of them armed with Swords and Piſtols.

Upon his haſty knock the Door was opened, and he commanding his Attendants to ſtay without, himſelf entred into the Houſe; at which the Speaker roſe out of his Chair, and ſtood below, and the King ſtept up, and looked round about the Houſe, to ſee if the five Members, or any of them were there; but they having had ſome inkling of his coming, were gone away before into London. The King in the Houſe of Commons.

He views the Houſe round, then ſits down in the Speaker's Chair, and ſpake to them to this effect.

Gentlemen,

" I am ſorry for this occaſion, for coming unto " you; yeſterday I ſent a Serjeant at Arms, upon " a very important Occaſion, to apprehend ſome " that upon my Commandment were accuſed of " high Treaſon, whereunto I did expect Obedi- " ence, and not a Meſſage; and I muſt declare un- " to you here: The King's Speech.

" That albeit no King that ever was in Eng- " land, ſhall be more careful of your Privileges, " to maintain them to the utmoſt of his Power, " than I ſhall be; yet you muſt know, that in " Caſes of Treaſon, no Perſon hath a Privilege: " And therefore I am come to know if any of " thoſe Perſons that I have accuſed for no ſlight " Crime, but for Treaſon, are here.

" I cannot expect that this Houſe can be in the " right Way that I do heartily wiſh it, therefore " I am come to tell you, that I muſt have them " whereſoever I find them.

Then the King again looked round the Houſe, and the Speaker ſtanding below by the Chair, the King asked him, " Whether any of thoſe Perſons " were in the Houſe? whether he ſaw any of " them? and where they were?

The Speaker thus ſurprized, yet with much Prudence falling on his Knee, anſwered the King to this purpoſe. The Speaker.

May it pleaſe your Majeſty,

" I have neither Eyes to ſee, nor Tongue to " ſpeak, in this Place, but as the Houſe is pleaſed " to direct me, whoſe Servant I am here; and " humbly beg your Majeſty's Pardon that I cannot " now give any other Anſwer than this, to what " your Majeſty is pleaſed to demand of me.

Then the King again caſting his Eye round about the Houſe, he ſpake to this effect.

" Well, ſince I ſee all the Birds are flown, I do " expect from you, that you do ſend them to me, " as ſoon as they return hither. But I aſſure you " on the Word of a King, I never did intend any " Force, but ſhall proſecute againſt them in a le- " gal and fair way, for I never meant any other.

" And

Anno 1641. " And now, ſince I ſee I cannot do what I came " for I think this no unfit Occaſion to repeat " what I have ſaid formerly, that whatſoever I " have done in favour, and to the good of my Sub- " jects, I do mean to maintain it.

" I will trouble you no more, but tell you I " do expect, as ſoon as they come to the Houſe, " you will ſend them to me; otherwiſe I muſt " take my own Courſe to find them.

Having ſaid this, the King roſe and went out of the Houſe again.

This Action of the King filled the Diſcourſes of all People, and it was much wondred at by many ſober Men, and judged extremely to his prejudice, and to the advantage of thoſe that were diſaffected to him.

The notorious Breach of the Privilege of the Houſe of Commons by that Action, could not but be foreſeen by any who had knowledge of Parliament Affairs: and to adviſe the King to ſuch a ſudden and intemperate Act, ſo juſtly liable to exception, and without any probability of Service to himſelf, was held very ſtrange.

And divers imagined, that if the five Members had not received a ſecret Notice from a great Court Lady, their Friend, (who over-heard ſome Diſcourſe of this intended Action, and thereof gave timely notice to theſe Gentlemen) whereby they got out of the Houſe juſt before the King came: Otherwiſe,

It was believed, that if the King had found them there, and called in his Guards to have ſeized them, the Members of the Houſe would have endeavoured the Defence of them, which might have proved a very unhappy and ſad Buſineſs; and ſo it did, notwithſtanding that was prevented. This ſudden Action being the firſt viſible and apparent Ground of the enſuing Troubles.

The Action diverſly cenſured. Divers Excuſes were made for this Action; ſome ſaid, it was the Womens Council and Irritation of the King (telling him, That if he were King of England, he would not ſuffer himſelf to be baffled about theſe Perſons) provoked him to go to the Houſe himſelf, and fetch them out.

Others ſaid, he was put upon it by thoſe who deſigned his Prejudice by it. Others ſaid, it was in paſſion, unadviſedly undertaken, and raſhly executed: None could make a ſatisfactory Apology for it, and the King himſelf afterwards acknowledged his too much paſſion in it.

At his unexpected coming into the Houſe, they were in a very great Amazement, but upon his going away, and ſo, as he might hear them, the Houſe was in a great diſorder, crying aloud many of them together, Privilege, Privilege.

Some of them brake out into Expreſſions, That there never was ſo unparallel'd an Action of any King, to the breach of all Freedom, not only in the Accuſation of their Members, ranſacking and ſearching their Studies and Papers, and ſeeking to apprehend their Perſons, but now in a hoſtile way he threatned the whole Body of the Houſe. They thereupon frame and publiſh a Declaration, Jan. 5. 1641.

Declaration. By which they ſet forth all this matter of the King's coming to the Houſe in a warlike manner, to the terror and affrightment of them; and that this is a high Breach of the Privileges of Parliament, and inconſiſtent with the Liberty and Freedom thereof.

They conceive, they cannot ſafely ſit without a Guard, in whom they may confide; for which they have been Suitors to the King, but could not yet obtain it.

They appoint a Committee to ſit at the Guild-hall in London, to conſider of theſe things, and of Ireland, and adjourn the Houſe.

The publiſh another Vote, That if any arreſt a Member of Parliament, by Warrant from the King only, it is a Breach of Privilege: and that the coming of Papiſts and Soldiers (to the number of five hundred armed Men) with the King to the Houſe, was a traiterous Deſign againſt the King and Parliament. 17 Car. Vote.

They vindicate the five Members, and declare, that a Paper iſſued out for apprehending them, was falſe and ſcandalous, and illegal, and that they ought to attend the Service of the Houſe; and require the Names of thoſe who adviſed the King to iſſue that Paper, and the Articles againſt the five Members.

Upon theſe Paſſages and Declarations, a great number of Perſons, in a tumultuous manner came from the City to Weſtminſter, where they offered many Affronts and Violences to divers of the Biſhops and others. Tumults.

Jan. 12. The Biſhops by Petition and Proteſtation in the Lords Houſe, ſet forth this, and their own Right to ſit, and vote in Parliament; which by reaſon of thoſe Tumults and Inſolences they could not do: They ſay, they have no Redreſs upon their Complaints hereof, and cannot attend the Service of the Parliament, without danger of their lives: they therefore proteſt againſt all Acts and Votes in their abſence, as null and void. And deſire this their Proteſtation may be entred. Biſhops Proteſt.

Divers of their Adverſaries were much pleaſed with this unadviſed Act of the Biſhops, being (as they wiſhed) a way prepared by themſelves for them to be ſet aſide, and removed from the Houſe of Lords.

For this, not long after, they were accuſed by the Commons of high Treaſon; Glynne was the Meſſenger: they were brought on their Knees to the Lords Bar, ten of them committed to the Tower, and the other two, in regard of their Age, to the Black Rod. Biſhops accuſed of high Treaſon.

The Houſe of Commons upon ſuſpicion of ſome Deſigns againſt their Perſons, petitioned the King for a Guard, to be commanded by the Earl of Eſſex, which the King denied, but promiſed to take care for their Security, as for Himſelf, his Wife, and Children.

Many Citizens tumultuouſly flocked to the King's Coach as he paſſed through the City of London, Beſeeching him to agree with his Parliament, and not to violate their Privileges.

After this, at a Common-Council, they draw up a Petition to the King, complaining,

" That Trade is decayed, and pray that he " would prevent the Ruin of the Proteſtant Re- " ligion, and the Lives and Liberties of the Sub- " jects, by the Deſigns of Papiſts; more particu- " larly by their fomenting the Iriſh Rebellion, " by changing the Conſtable of the Tower, and " making Preparations there, by fortifying White- " hall, and his Majeſty's late Invaſion of the " Houſe of Commons. London Petition.

" They pray, that by the Parliament's Advice, " the Proteſtants in Ireland may be relieved, the " Tower put in the Hands of Perſons of truſt; a " Guard appointed for the Safety of the Parlia- " ment; and that the five Members may not be " reſtrained, nor proceeded againſt, but by the " Privileges of Parliament.

To this the King gave anſwer; " That he could " not expreſs a greater ſenſe of Ireland, than he " had done; that meerly to ſatisfy the City, he " had removed a worthy Perſon from the charge " of the Tower; and that the late Tumults had " cauſed him to fortify Whitehall, for the Secu- " rity of his own Perſon. The King's Anſwer.

" That his going to the Houſe of Commons, " was to apprehend thoſe five Members for Trea-Anno 1641. "ſon, to which the Privilege of Parliament could "not extend; and that yet he would proceed a- "gainſt them no otherwiſe than legally.

" ſon,

During this time, the five Members had got into Friends Houſes of the City, where they were highly careſſed, and had the Company of divers principal Members of the Houſe, to conſult together, and to lay their farther Deſigns, and they wanted nothing.

Petition. Soon after this, divers Buckinghamſhire-men came up with a Petition to the King, for Mr. Hampden, their Knight of the Shire (whereof probably he was not altogether ignorant beforehand) They pray, that Hampden, and the reſt that lie under the burthen of Accuſation, may enjoy their juſt Privileges.

Tumults. Great numbers of People gathered together in a very tumultuous manner, about Whiteball and Weſtminſter; and it was a diſmal thing to all ſober Men, eſpecially Members of Parliament, to ſee and hear them.

The King removes to Hampton-Court. The King fearing danger from them, or perhaps by the unfortunate Counſel of Papiſts, as ſome reported, thought fit to remove to Hampton Court, and took with him the Queen, Prince, and Duke of York.

This was another, and great wonder to many prudent Men, that the King ſhould leave this City, the Place of his, and his Predeceſſors uſual Reſidence; where moſt of his Friends and Servants were about him, the Magazine of all Proviſions both for War and Peace, the Place for Intelligence and Supplies, and betake himſelf to the Country, where theſe things were not to be had; and by his leaving the Town, bring great diſadvantages upon himſelf and his Affairs: this was thought not to have been done adviſedly.

But the fears of thoſe with him, and his own fears for them, occaſioned by the Tumults, and his hopes that by his abſence the heat of the Houſe of Commons might in ſome meaſure be cooled, were alledged in excuſe of this Action.

Five Members return to the Houſe. The next day the five Members were triumphantly brought from London to Weſtminſter by Water, by a great number of Citizens, and Seamen, in Boats and Barges, with Guns and Flags, braving as they paſſed by Whitehall, and making large Proteſtations at Weſtminſter, of their adherence to the Parliament.

At Hampton-Court the King gave the like anſwer to the Buckinghamſhire Petition, as he had done before to that of London.

Lord Digby. Lunsford. The Parliament were informed that the Lord Digby, and Colonel Lunsford were gathering ſome Troops of Horſe at Kingſtone, and appeared in Arms there, whereupon they order the Sheriffs, and Juſtices of Peace in all Counties, to ſuppreſs all unlawful Aſſemblies, with the Trained Bands; and to ſecure the Magazines. Colonel Lunsford is apprehended and ſent to the Tower, and the Lord Digby eſcaped beyond Sea.

The Court removing to Royſton, the Attorney General Herbert is ſummoned to appear at the Lords Bar, to anſwer concerning the Articles againſt the five Members, but the King, by his Letter to the Lord Keeper Littleton, took all the matter upon himſelf, and excuſed his Attorney, and concludes that finding cauſe to deſiſt wholly from proceeding againſt the perſons accuſed, he had commanded his Attorney to proceed no further therein.

Meſſage. Jan. 20. The King by Meſſage to the Parliament, adviſeth them to digeſt into one body, all the grievances of the Kingdom, and to ſend them to him, promiſing his favourable aſſent to thoſe means which ſhould be found moſt effectual for redreſs, wherein he would not only equal, but exceed the moſt indulgent Princes. 17 Car.

The Scots having a fair Plantation in Ireland, offered to tranſport thither 2500 Soldiers, upon certain Articles, which the Parliament accepted, and at length the King aſſented to them.

Then the Scots Commiſſioners mediated for a Reconciliation of the differences between the King and Parliament, for which the Houſe of Commons returned thanks to them.

Petition. The Houſe of Commons moved the Lords to join with them, in petitioning the King, for the Militia and the Command of the Tower, but the Lords not conſenting, the Commons themſelves importune the King, to put thoſe Powers into the hands of the Parliament, as the only available means to remove their Fears and Jealouſies.

Anſwer. The King not willing to part with thoſe Powers, gave this anſwer, that he thought the Militia to be lawfully ſubject to no command but his own, and therefore would not let it out of his hands; that he hath preferred to the Lieutenancy of the Tower, a perſon of known Fortune, and unqueſtionable Reputation, and that he would prefer none but ſuch to the Command of his Forts, and Caſtles; yet would not intruſt the power of conferring thoſe Places and Dignities from himſelf; being derived to him from his Anceſtors by the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom.

The Commons petitioned again for theſe Powers, and were again denied them by the King.

Petitions. Divers Petitions accompanied with great numbers of People, and more Subſcriptions from Suffolk, London, and one from the City Dames were preſented to the Parliament, againſt the Votes of Popiſh Lords, and of Biſhops: to which, Anſwer. Anſwers were given by the Commons, that they had endeavoured, and ſtill would endeavour with the Lords, that redreſs might be had therein.

Bill for diſabling Biſhops. Soon after this, the Lords paſſed the Bill for diſabling perſons in holy Orders to have any Place, or Vote in Parliament, or to have any Temporal Juriſdiction.

The Commons again petition the King for the Militia, and to clear the five Members, but they perceived by his anſwer, that he was reſolved not to part with the Militia out of himſelf, nor otherwiſe to clear the five Members, but incluſively, within a general Pardon.

The King ſent for all his Houſhold Servants to attend him, particularly for the Earls of Eſſex and Holland, but they excuſed themſelves with the neceſſity of performing their Duties in Parliament: upon which, Eſſex was put out of his Place of Chamberlain, and the other of the King's Bed-Chamber, and became the more provoked. Eſſex. Holland.

Letters intercepted. The Lord Digby ſent Letters from Middleborough to the Queen, and to Secretary Nicholas, to adviſe the King to betake himſelf to ſome place of Security, where he, and others might ſafely reſort to him, and he doubted not but that he ſhould do him acceptable Service: but theſe Letters being intercepted,

The Parliament ſent to the King that he would deſire the Queen not to correſpond with Digby, nor any others, whom his great Council had proclaimed Traitors.

The Parliament took notice of a Rumour that they intended to accuſe the Queen of High Treaſon, which they deny, and call a publick Scandal upon them, to which the Queen gave a mild anſwer: yet, careful to prevent any danger, ſhe obtains leave of the King, who alſo acquaints the Parliament, that his Daughter was to go into Holland to her betrothed Husband, the young Prince of Orange, and that her Mother the Queen deſired to go with her Daughter.

Accordingly

Anno 1641. Accordingly the Queen went with her Daughter into Holland, and carried with her all her own and the King's Jewels, not leaving behind the Jewels of the Crown; that with them, and the assistance of the Prince of Orange, a sufficient Party might be raised for the King.

The Queen to Holland.

Pym. At a Conference with the Lords Mr. Pym affirmed that many of the chief Commanders, now in the Head of the Rebels, and great Papists, had been licensed to pass thither, by the King, after the Lord Lieutenant had put a stop at the Ports against their coming thither.

The King much distasted at this, as intimating his conniving at the Rebellion, required the Declaration of the House of Commons for his Vindication, but could not obtain it.

Militia. The Parliament were busy in Debates touching the ordering of the Militia, for the several Counties: in which some declared their Opinions, That the Power of the Militia was solely in the King, and ought to be left to him, and that the Parliament never did, nor ought to meddle with the same.

Others were of Opinion, That the King had not this power in him, but that it was solely in the Parliament, and that if the King refused to order the same according to the advice of the Parliament, that then they by the Law might do it without him: and this was moved to be now done by the Parliament, the King having denied their former Petitions for settling of the Militia as they desired.

Upon this Debate I spake to this effect.

Mr. Speaker,

" I have often heard it said in former Debates, " in other matters, in this House, that such and " such a thing, was of as great concernment as ever " came within these Walls. I am sure it may be " said so of the matter of your present Debate; " it is truly of the greatest concernment that ever " came within these Walls.

" It highly concerns us all, and our Posterity " after us, where the Power of this Militia shall " be placed. This great Power, which indeed " commands all men, and all things, cannot be " too warily lodged, nor too seriously considered: and I do heartily wish that this great " Word, this new Word, the Militia, this hard " Word might never have come within these " Walls: But that this House may be as the " Temple of Janus, ever shut against it, I take " the meaning of those Gentlemen who introduced this Word to be, the Power of the " Sword, Potestas Gladii, which is a great and " necessary Power, and properly belonging to the " Magistrate, Potestas Gladii in Facinorosos, without which our Peace and Property cannot be " maintained.

" But Potestas Gladii in Manibus Facinorosorum, " in the hands of Souldiers, is that whereof you " now debate, and it is best out of their hands, I " hope it will never come there. Some worthy " Gentlemen have declared their Opinions, that " this Power of the Militia is by Right and Law " in the King only, others affirm it to be in the Parliament only; I crave pardon to differ from both " these Opinions. I humbly apprehend that this " Power of the Militia, is neither in the King only, nor only in the Parliament; and if the Law " hath placed it any where, it is both in the King " and Parliament, when they join together.

" And it is a wise Institution of our Law, not " to settle this Power any where, but rather to " leave it in dubio, or in nubibus, that the People " might be kept in ignorance thereof as a thing " not fit to be known, not to be pried into. It is " the great Arcanum Imperii, and the less it is " meddled with, the less acquaintance we have " with it, the better it will be for all sorts of persons, both for King and People. 17. Car.

" That this Power of the Militia, is not in the " King only, appears in this, that the Power of " Money is not in the King, but it will be granted here, that the Power of Money is solely in " this House; and without the Power of Money " to pay the Soldiers, the Power of the Militia " will be of little force.

" But if the Power of the Militia should be in " the King, yet the Power of Money being in the " Parliament, they must both agree, or else keep " the Sword in the Scabberd, which is the best " place for it.

" It is true, that the King by his tenures may " require the service in War, of those that hold " of him; but if they stay above 40 days with " him, unless he give them pay they will stay no " longer.

" And it is also true (as hath been observed) " that our Law looks upon the King, as the Jewish " Law did upon theirs, that by his Kingly Office, " he is to go in and out before the people, and to lead " them in Battle against their enemies, but by the " Laws of the Jews, their King could not undertake a War abroad without the consent of the " great Sanhedrim.

" And by our Law, as is declared by the Statute 1 E. 3. and by divers subsequent Statutes " the King can compell no man to go out of his " Countrey, but upon the sudden coming of " strange Enemies into the Realm: and how " many of our Parliament Rolls do record that " the King advised with his Parliament about his " Foreign Wars; and could not undertake them " without the Advice and Supplies of the Parliament.

" All Power of the Militia is exercised either " in Offence or Defence, Defence is either a- " against the Invasions of Enemies from Abroad, " or against Insurrections at Home.

" Against Insurrections at Home, the Sheriff " of every County hath the Power of the Militia " in him, and if he be negligent to suppress them " with the posse comitatus, he is finable for it.

" Against Invasions from Abroad, every man " will be forward to give his assistance; there " will be little need to raise Forces, when every " man will be ready to defend himself, and to " fight pro aris & focis.

" As to Offensive War against a Foreign Enemy, if the King will make it of himself, he " must of himself pay his Army; which his own " Revenue will hardly afford, nor can he compell any of his Subjects to serve him in those " Wars; none can by Law be pressed to serve " in the War but by Act of Parliament.

" But not to waste more of your time, Sir, I " shall conclude that in my humble Opinion, the " Power of the Militia is neither in the King a- " lone, nor in the Parliament: but if any where " in the eye of our Law, it is in the King and " Parliament both consenting together.

" And I think it best that it should be there " still, I cannot join in that advice to you, to " settle the Militia of your selves without the " King, but rather with those worthy Gentlemen " who have moved, that we yet again should petition his Majesty, that the Militia may be " settled in such hands as both he and you shall " agree upon whom you may trust; and who I " hope

Anno 1641. "hope will be more careful to keep it ſheathed "than to draw it.

After a long Debate in the Houſe upon this Matter, they reſolve to move the King that Sir John Biron may be put out from being Lieutenant of the Tower, and Sir John Conyers to ſucceed him; which was granted.

Then they proceed to nominate fit perſons for truſt of the Militia in the ſeveral Counties, and paſs an Act To diſable all Clergy-men from exerciſing any Temporal Juriſdiction.

Meſſage. The King ſends a Meſſage to them, That to ſatisfy and compoſe all Differences, he will by Proclamation require all Statutes concerning Popiſh Recuſants to be put in execution.

That the ſeven condemned Prieſts ſhall be baniſhed, and all Romiſh Prieſts within twenty days to depart the Kingdom.

He refers the conſideration of the Government, and Liturgy of the Church, wholly to the two Houſes.

And offers himſelf to go in Perſon to the Iriſh War.

Petition. The Lords and Commons petition the King, That though he find cauſe to deſert the proſecution of their Members, yet the Charge againſt them reflects upon the whole Parliament; they deſire to know the Informers, and their Suggeſtions, to be proceeded againſt as by the Statutes 37, & 38 E. 3.

Then they ordain the Power of the Militia, for defence of the Parliament, Tower, and City of London, under the Command of Skippon, a faithful and able Soldier: And petition the King, for ſettling the Militia of the ſeveral Counties, on ſuch as they had nominated; to which the King reſpited his Anſwer, till his Return from Dover, whither he accompanied the Queen, and their Daughter, going for Holland.

Skippon. Petition. Militia.

Febr. 15. That pious and worthy Judge, Sir George Crooke, having attained near the Age of 80 years, died at his Houſe at Waterſtoke in Oxfordſhire, lamented by his Neighbours and Relations.

Anſwer. The King, being returned from Dover to Greenwich, ſent his Anſwer to the Parliament's Petition concerning the Militia, of the inconvenience and breach of his Right to have it ſettled as they deſired: And he ſent for his two Sons, to come from Hampton-Court to him to Greenwich.

Bill for Ireland. Feb. 26. The Houſe of Commons paſſed the Bill for the Adventurers for Ireland, That every one that would bring in and adventure money for the reducing of Ireland ſhould have ſo many Acres of the Iriſh Rebels Lands, proportionable to the money which they brought in, and very good Bargains; whereupon very great ſums of money were brought in for that ſervice.

Militia. The Parliament again, and moſt earneſtly, preſs and importune the King to ſettle the Militia according to an Ordinance paſſed by them for that purpoſe: the King excepts againſt it, and ſhews his reaſons why it was not fit for him to confirm it; and then he goes to Theobalds.

Petition. Thither the Petition of the Parliament followed him yet more earneſtly preſſing him to confirm their ſettlement of the Militia, in which Petition they plainly tell the King, That the buſineſs of the ſettling of the Militia will endure no more delay; and that if his Majeſty ſhall ſtill refuſe to agree with his two Houſes of Parliament in that buſineſs, and ſhall not be pleaſed upon their humble advice, to do what they deſire therein, that then for the ſafety of his Majeſty, and of themſelves, and of the whole Kingdom, and to preſerve the peace thereof, and to prevent future fears and jealouſies, they ſhall be conſtrained of themſelves, without his Majeſty, to ſettle that neceſſary buſineſs of the Militia.

The King, much ſurprized at this home Petition, yet ſends his Anſwer, and Reaſons why he could not aſſent unto it: but the Parliament voted his Anſwers to the buſineſs of the Militia to be unſatisfactory, and that the Kingdom be forthwith put into a poſture of Defence. 17 Car. Vote.

They appoint a Committee to draw a Declaration upon the Cauſes of their Fears and Jealouſies, and to conſider what was fit further to be done; and this was March 2. the next day after the King's laſt Anſwer given to their Petition concerning the Militia.

Then Advertiſements are given out of dangers from Neighbour Princes; upon which the Earl of Northumberland Lord Admiral is commanded to fit all the Navy Royal for the Sea, and private Owners of Ships are perſuaded to do the like. Beacons are new made, Sea-marks ſet up, and great poſting up and down with Pacquets; all ſymptoms of the enſuing War.

The King being removed to Royſton, March 9. 1641. thither the Earls of Pembroke, and Holland, who had been before very intimate with the King, and obliged to him, were ſent with the Parliament's Declaration, mentioning the King's Miſgovernments, and his Actions; Declaration.

By attempting to incenſe the late Northern Army againſt the Parliament.

The Petition delivered to Captain Legg with the King's own hand, and ſigned C. R.

The buſineſs of the Lord Kimbolton and the five Members.

The ſuſpicious deſigning of a Guard about the King's Perſon.

The Underhand promoting of the Iriſh Rebellion.

The ordering of Sir John Penington to land the Lord Digby, from thence to alienate the King from his Parliament, and to procure foreign aſſiſtance to the King, appearing more credible by his removal with the Prince, and the many Advertiſements from Rome, Venice, Paris, and other parts, of aid to be given to the King in reference to ſome deſign againſt Religion, and the Parliament.

They deſire the King to put away his wicked Counſellors, and to put his truſt in the Parliament; which if he would do, they would ſacrifice their Lives, Fortunes and utmoſt Endeavours to the ſupportation of his Sovereignty.

The Lords would have moved the King to have come nearer to the Parliament, and to have granted the Militia for a time, but it was refuſed. Militia.

Then he told them in ſhort, that their Fears and Doubts and Jealouſies were ſuch, as he would take time to ſatisfy the whole World of, but that his own were not trivial; occaſioned by ſo many Scandalous Pamphlets, Seditious Sermons, ſundry Publick Tumults, hitherto uninquired into, and unpuniſhed. Anſwer.

Sometime after he publiſhed a Declaration for further Anſwer to this effect.

That he had no evil Counſellors about him, but leaves ſuch to their Cenſure, where they ſhould find them.

That he deſired the Judgment of Heaven might be manifeſted upon thoſe, who had any deſign againſt the Proteſtant Profeſſion, that the Scotiſh Troubles were ſilenced by the Act of Oblivion.

That the charging him with any inclining to the Iriſh Rebellion, was a high and cauſleſs Injury.

That he never intended to exaſperate the late Army, or to uſe them againſt the Parliament.

That he ſigned Captain Legg's Petition to ſatisfy the Army, and Sir Jacob Aſhley of his Opinion.

That Digby and Jermin never were at Whitehall, nor had any warrant from him after the reſtraint.

That

That he had given ſufficient Anſwers about Kimbolton and the five Members.

That the care of his own Safety cauſed him to raiſe a Guard at Whitehall, and to receive the Tender of the Gentlemen of the Inns of Court of their Service; and that he looked upon their foreign Advertiſements as wild and irrational.

Vote. The King removes Northward; in the mean time the Parliament voted the Ordinance for the Defence of the Kingdom no whit prejudicial to the Oath of Allegiance, but to be obeyed as the fundamental Laws, and the King's Commands for Lieutenancy over the reſpective Counties to be illegal and void.

In theſe Votes they received great Encouragement and Confirmation from the Opinions of ſeveral of the Members of the Houſe of Commons, as Pym, Hampden, Hollis, Stapleton; and of Lawyers, St. John, Corbet, L'Iſle, and divers others; and chiefly, from the confident Opinion of the Lord Keeper Littleton, concurring with them. Others who went along with them, were not yet clear of this Opinion.

Meſſage. From Huntington the King ſends them a Meſſage, Mar. 15. That he means to make his Reſidence at York, and deſires them to haſten their Succours for Ireland, and not upon any pretence of an Ordinance, to which his Aſſent is not given (as by Law it ought) to do againſt Law, which he was to keep, and his Subjects to obey.

Lords Report. Upon this Meſſage from the King the Parliament were the more exaſperated by a Report from the Lords who were ſent to him unto Royſton, that at the reading of that part of their Meſſage concerning Mr. Jermin, the King ſaid that it is falſe, and when they read that of Captain Legg, the King ſaid that's a Lye.

Anſwer. In anſwer to the King's Meſſage from Huntington, the Parliament vote that the King's Abſence ſo far from his Parliament was obſtructive to the Relief of Ireland, and therefore all thoſe Counſellors that adviſed him to it, are to be ſuſpected as Favourers of that bloody Rebellion, as likewiſe thoſe who perſuaded his Majeſty to queſtion, or contradict their Votes; which was a high Breach of Privilege of Parliament.

Mar. 16. At Stamford the King proclaims the putting in execution the Laws againſt Papiſts, and ſo goes on to York, and there Mar. 24. repeals his Grant for paſſing the Bill of Tonnage and Poundage, and commands the Payment of it for the future, according to the Act, 1 Jac.

The Earl of Northumberland, Lord Admiral, being indiſpoſed, the King appoints Sir John Pennington Vice-Admiral to take the Charge of the Fleet, but the Parliament by a Paper incloſed in a Letter to the Lord Keeper Littleton Mar. 28. recommended the Earl of Warwick to the King, for that Service; the firſt Recommendation of theirs for the chief Sea Commander, but he was refuſed.

Addreſs at York. April 5. The Aſſizes being at York, the Gentry, Miniſters and Freeholders of that County by an humble and hearty Addreſs, teſtify their Loyalty to the King, and Sorrow for the Diſtractions, and pray his Majeſty to be pleaſed to declare ſome Expedients, which may take away all Miſunderſtandings betwixt him and his great Council.

The King gives them a gracious Anſwer, and wiſhes them to apply to the Parliament for the good of all.

Meſſage. The King ſends a Meſſage to the Parliament, offering his own Perſon to reduce Ireland, and his intent to raiſe his Guards for that purpoſe, deſires them to quicken their Levies, and ſaith he hath prepared a Bill by his Attorney, concerning the Militia, for the good of all if received; if refuſed, he calls God and the World to judge between them. Car. 18.

To this they returned no Anſwer.

The County of Bucks advanced 6000 l. towards this Service for the Relief of bleeding Ireland, and their Money was repaid upon the Bill of 400000 l. to be raiſed for that Service.

The Parliament apprehending the King's purpoſe to ſeize upon the great Magazine at Hull, they deſire it might be tranſported from thence to the Tower of London, to ſupply the want of Ammunition there, from whence Ireland was ſupply'd, and here it would be eaſier tranſported to Ireland. Hull.

To which the King returns a quick Anſwer, denying their Petition, they ſhortly after ſend their Reaſons to the King againſt his going in Perſon to Ireland, and tell him they cannot conſent to any Levies but ſuch as they ſhall adviſe, and others they ſhall interpret to the Terror of the People, and ſuppreſs it; and refuſe to ſubmit to any Commiſſioners in the King's Abſence, but to govern by conſent of Parliament. Reaſons.

This was looked upon by many as very ſtrange, and high, and the King, in anſwer to it ſays, He looks upon them as his great Council with regard; but yet upon himſelf as not deprived of his Underſtanding; nor diveſted of any Right he had before the Parliament did meet. Anſwer.

That he called them by his Writ and Authority to give him Counſel, but did not reſign his Intereſt and Freedom, nor will ſubject himſelf to their Determinations, and holds himſelf free to diſſent from them.

That they menace, rather than adviſe in their Petition, doth not ſtagger him.

The Lords Juſtices and Council of Ireland, hearing of the King's Intention to come thither in Perſon, writ a Letter of Thanks and Encouragement to him, to proceed in that his gracious Intention, but the Parliament being averſe thereunto, the King declined it.

The King demands Juſtice from the Houſe of Lords againſt ſeveral Authors and Preachers of ſeditious Doctrine, That the King denying what the Parliament deſired, they might do it without him, and that human Laws do not bind the Conſcience, with much of the like new Opinions, but nothing was done in it.

The Parliament had committed the charge of the Town and Magazine of Hull to Sir John Hotham, one of their Members, who was ſent down thither, the Parliament purpoſing to remove the Magazine to London, the County of York had petitioned that it might ſtill remain at Hull, for ſecuring the Northern Parts, eſpecially the King reſiding there. Hotham.

The King thought it the beſt way himſelf to ſeize upon the Magazine and taking a Guard of his Servants, and ſome neighbouring Gentry, April 23. He went to Hull, but, contrary to his expectation, he found the Gates ſhut, and the Bridges drawn. Hull.

And from the Walls appeared Sir John Hotham denying entrance to the King; which he ſaid, he could not admit without breach of his truſt to the Parliament.

The King required him to ſhew his Order for this, from the Parliament.

He then ſaid that the King had too great a Train, and would not admit him entrance though with but twenty Horſe; which ſo moved the King that he cauſed Hotham to be there proclaimed Traitor, and ſo returned to York.

Anno 1642. Thence he ſends to the Parliament to demand Juſtice againſt Hotham, and ſends to the Magiſtrates of Hull, to admoniſh them not to adhere to Hotham, but to teſtify their Allegiance to their King, by delivering the Magazine into his hands.

Meſſages. Again the King ſends to the Parliament for exemplary Juſtice againſt Hotham, and that immediately the Magazine be deliver'd up to him, and till this be done, he will intend no other Buſineſs, for to be in worſe condition than the meaneſt Subject, not to enjoy his own, it is time to examine how he loſt them, and to try all poſſible ways by help of God, the Law, and his good Subjects, to recover them. God ſo deal with us as we continue theſe Reſolutions.

Vote. To theſe Meſſages having no return, Scouts are laid to intercept Letters between the Houſe and Hull, which they voted a high Breach of their Privilege, and to defend it with their Lives and Fortunes; they juſtify Hotham, and order, that the Sheriffs and Juſtices of Peace ſuppreſs all Forces that ſhall be raiſed or gathered together againſt Hull, or to diſturb the Peace.

Militia. The King's Bill of the Militia was declined by the Parliament, and a new one from themſelves preſented to the King; which he refuſed and gave his Reaſons for it. They put the Power in the Perſons nominated by them, excluding the King, in ordering any thing together with them.

The King offered that in his Abſence in Ireland it ſhould be ſo, and that for a year; but it was not liked. Then they paſs a Declaration touching Hotham, and avow his Action, and ſet forth Deſigns againſt Hull April 28. and ſend a Committee thither for the better ſecuring of the Town.

Hotham is authorized by his Warrants to raiſe the trained Bands in Yorkſhire, to march with their Arms into Hull, where he diſarmed them, and turned them home again.

The King ſignifies to the Sheriff, that this cannot be done legally, and forbids any Muſter without his Command, and to ſuppreſs thoſe that diſobey with the Poſſe Comitatus.

May 5. The Parliament require all Perſons in Authority, to put the Ordinance of the Militia in Execution, which the King declares to be no legal Power in the Houſes; and commands that none do obey it, and ſummons the Gentry of the County to York, to whom he relates theſe illegal Proceedings of the Parliament, and tells them his Purpoſe to have a Guard only to ſecure his Perſon, in which he deſires their Aſſiſtance.

And the rather; becauſe the Members that came with the laſt Meſſage to the King, returned to York, and before them all theſe Proceedings were had.

Gardiner. Sir Thomas Gardiner, Recorder of London, was impeached for adviſing the Lord Mayor to pay Ship-money, and other illegal things; and againſt Scotland, and oppoſing the Parliament, but he got to the King.

The County of York being ſummoned, the Committee prevailed with ſome of them to oppoſe the raiſing of a Guard for the King, and the Parliament declared againſt it, and that ſuch as do are diſturbers of the Peace.

The Ordinance of the Militia being now paſt, and Lieutenants named for the ſeveral Counties; they nominated their Deputy Lieutenants to the Parliament for their Approbation.

The Lord Pagett being named in the Ordinance, and approved to be Lieutenant of Bucks; he named Hampden, Goodwin, Grenville, Tyrrell, Windwood and my ſelf to be his Deputy Lieutenants, who were approved by the Parliament.

And the 11th of May 1642 he ſent to me a Commiſſion to be one of his Deputy Lieutenants in this Tenure: Car. 18.

" ament aſſembled, have for the ſafety of

" Theſe are therefore to appoint you by virtue of
" the ſaid Ordinance, to do and execute all ſuch
" Powers and Authorities as are before mention-
" ed according to the Tenor, Intent, and Pur-
" poſe thereof.

William Paget.

Not long after this, the Lord Say, who was by the Ordinance nominated to be Lieutenant of the County of Oxon, ſent his Deputation to me to be one of his Deputy Lieutenants for that County, which was of the ſame Tenor and Effect as the other was for Buckinghamſhire, under his Hand and Seal, dated 28. May 1642.

W. Say and Seale.

The Lord Paget, not long after this, began to boggle, and was unfixed in his Reſolutions; and upon the King's publiſhing of his Commiſſion of Array, and Declaration againſt the Ordinance of Parliament for the Militia (his Lordſhip's Heart failing him, and being unſatisfy'd in his Judgment) he revolted from the Parliament, and went to the King.

Where-

Anno 1642. Whereupon the Lord Wharton was nominated and approved by both Houſes of Parliament to be in his room, Lieutenant for the County of Bucks.

Who ſent unto me his Deputation to be one of his Deputy Lieutenants for that County, which was of the ſame Tenor and Effect with the Deputation from the Lord Say; and was under his Hand and Seal dated the 5th Day of June 1642, Signed.

Phil. Wharton.

To this Deputation was annexed the Ordinance of Parliament, by which the Lord Wharton was conſtituted Lieutenant of Bucks.

Different Opinions. Mr. Palmer, Mr. Hyde and Mr. Bridgeman, and divers other eminent Lawyers, and Gentlemen, had given their opinions poſitively againſt the Bill, and left the Houſe upon the paſſing of it.

On the other part, the Lord Littleton was moſt confident for the legality of it, and divers other Lawyers, and Gentlemen of the ſhort Robe were clearly for it, and "That the Lords and Commons, "in caſe of the King's Minority, Sickneſs or Abſence, had done the ſame in other Times.

"As when Hen. III. died, and his Son Ed. I. "was in the Holy Land, and came not home "in almoſt two Years after his Father's death, "yet in the mean time, the Lords and Commons "appointed Lieutenants in the ſeveral Counties; "and made ſeveral Ordinances, which are of "Force at this day.

"So are the Ordinances made by them in the "Minority of Hen. VI. and upon the difference "between him and the Duke of York, and the "Ordinances in the Minority of Ed. VI. and in "other times.

"That the King was now abſent, and having "called his Parliament at Weſtminſter, was himſelf gone as far from them as York, and had, "before he came thither, and ſince, appeared "with warlike Forces about him, to the terror "of the Parliament.

"That the Buſineſs of Ireland and other threatning Dangers gave too much cauſe of Fears "and Jealouſies to the Parliament, and to ſtand "upon their Guard, and for Defence of themſelves and the Kingdom.

"Without which the King would ſo grow "upon them, and his evil Counſellors ſo prevail, "that they would undoubtedly bring their deſigns to paſs of a ſpeedy introducing of Popery "and Tyranny; whereas, if they ſaw the Parliament in a good poſture of Defence, and that "the People generally would adhere to them, as "no doubt but they would, that then the King "would be brought to a good accommodation "and agreement with his Parliament, without a "blow to be ſtruck between them.

"Whereby they ſhould preſerve the juſt "Rights and Liberties of the Subject, the Privilege of Parliament, and themſelves and their "Friends, and the Proteſtant Religion from "Ruin, which, without this appearance only of "Arms, or Power to arm if there ſhould be "occaſion, would unavoidably be brought to "paſs.

Theſe Arguments, together with the ſolemn Proteſtations of the moſt powerful and active Members, "That they had not the leaſt purpoſe "or intention of any War with the King, but to "arm themſelves for their neceſſary Defence," prevailed with me to keep my Station, and at preſent, to accept thoſe Commiſſions of Deputy Lieutenancy.

Maynard, Glynne, Grimſtone, St. John, Selden and divers other Gentlemen of great parts and intereſt, accepted of the like Commiſſions, and continued in their Service in the Parliament. 18 Car.

Mr. Geoffrey Palmer being gone out of Town, wrote to me to make his excuſe for not attending the Houſe, which was occaſioned no otherwiſe than by his indiſpoſition of Health; this I anſwered for him when the Houſe was called.

The King reſolves that Eaſter Term be adjourned from London to York, the Parliament vote it to be illegal, and order that the Lord Keeper Littleton iſſue no Writs, or Proclamation for that purpoſe.

They publiſh a large Declaration, much to the ſame effect as the former were, mentioning that the Rebellion in Ireland was countenanced by evil Council about the King, the proclaiming them Traitors deferred from October to January after, and then but 40 Copies ordered to be printed, nor any of them to be publiſhed without the King's Order, whereas the Proceedings againſt the Scots, and proclaiming them Traitors, were very ſharp and ſpeedy. Declaration.

To this the King gives an Anſwer, in effect the ſame with what he had ſaid before to theſe particulars, after which, he writes to his Council in Scotland, to acquaint them with the State of his Affairs in England; to which he receives a dutiful and affectionate Anſwer, with a Petition from divers of the Nobility and People there full of zeal and loyalty to his Service.

The Parliament hearing of this, took courſe to turn the Balance, and within eight days after, the Scots Council declare their earneſt deſires both to King and Parliament, to join in a perfect Union; and humbly deſire the King, to hearken to his greateſt, his beſt and moſt unparallel'd Council.

They diſſuade the King from a perſonal Journey into Ireland, and pray that a Mediation may be at home, ere the breach be wider. And in fine they come to a large manifeſtation of their true and hearty affection to the Parliament of England, proteſting to do nothing contrary to them in their Privileges.

A multitude of People at Edinburgh hearing of the King's Letter to his Council there, and of the Anſwer to it, and Petition before-mentioned; they petition the Council there, not to meddle by any verbal or real engagement for the King againſt the Parliament of England.

Theſe Paſſages in Scotland gave much advantage to the Parliament's Affairs in England, who proteſt their Fidelity to the King, and court the Scots with very kind expreſſions.

The Earl of Briſtol moved for an accommodation, and a ſelect Committee to be appointed to conſider of ſome way to effect the ſame.

But the Parliament voted that which was done at York, for a Guard for the King, to be a preparation for War againſt the Parliament, a Breach of the truſt repoſed in him, by his People, contrary to his Oath, and tending to the diſſolution of his Government, and all ſuch as ſerve him there, to be Traitors to the Laws of the Kingdom, 11 Ric. II. and 1 Hen. IV. Vote.

After this they publiſh another Remonſtrance of the King's Miſactions and their own Privileges. He anſwers it, and they reply; and May 28, they order, That all Sheriffs, Juſtices of the Peace, &c. within one hundred and fifty Miles of York, make ſtay of all Arms and Ammunition carrying to York, and apprehend the Conveyers; and that all Sheriffs do ſuppreſs all Forces coming together by the King's Commiſſion, and all Perſons to aid them; and this to be publiſhed in all Market Towns and Churches. Order.

Anno 1642. The King forbids all Obedience to any Orders, or Ordinance of Parliament for the Militia, according to the Statute 7 Ed. I. and requires all the People of Yorkſhire to meet at a Day and Place; which the Parliament declare to be againſt Law, and forbid Obedience to it.

This was an unhappy condition for the poor People, none knowing what to do, or whom to obey; nor what would be the conſequence of theſe thwartings between the great Powers and Authorities of King and Parliament.

Divers Members of both Houſes withdrew to the King, which cauſed an Order for all to attend at a Day, upon forfeiting of an hundred Pounds to the Iriſh War.

They order, that whoſoever ſhall lend or bring Money into this Kingdom upon the King's Jewels, ſhall be an Enemy to the State.

Nineteen Propoſitions. July 2. The Parliament ſent to the King Nineteen Propoſitions for Peace; which are in Print; the King rejected them, as inconſiſtent with the Regal Rights; he careſſeth the People of Yorkſhire.

July 4. The Parliament order all Deputy Lieutenants to be preſent at all Muſters, and the Lieutenants of Counties to diſpatch their Warrants.

July 10. They make an Order for bringing in Money or Plate, to maintain Horſemen and Arms, for defence of the King and Parliament, and for the publick Peace.

Commiſſion of Array. The King ſends forth his Commiſſions of Array, begins in Leiceſterſhire; theſe Commiſſions were declared by the Parliament, to be againſt Law; and the Actors in them to be Betrayers of the Subjects Liberty.

Lord Keeper Littleton. The Lord Keeper Littleton, after his great adherence to the Parliament, delivered the great Seal to Mr. Elliot, whom the King ſent to him for it; and ſhortly after, Littleton followed the Seal to the King, but was not much reſpected by him, or his Courtiers; yet was he a Man of Courage, and of excellent Parts and Learning.

Proteſtation at York. Many other of the Lords being with the King at York, he declared to them, That he would not exerciſe any illegal Authority, but defend them and all others againſt the Votes of Parliament, and not engage them in any War againſt the Parliament: And they all in a ſolemn Proteſtation engaged to his Majeſty to ſtand by him.

Declaration. The King wrote to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, Not to raiſe any Forces for the Parliament; and ſets forth his large Declaration, and invites Men to bring in to him Money, Horſe, and Arms on Security of his Foreſts and Parks, for the Principal, and eight per Cent. Intereſt.

He forbids Levies without his Conſent, upon the Statutes 7 Ed. I. 2 Ed. III. 11 Ric. II. and the Earl of Shrewsbury's Caſe in Hen. VIII's time; and minds them of their Oath of Allegiance, to be faithful to the King's Perſon, as well as to his Authority, and juſtifies his Commiſſions of Array.

To which the Parliament reply, and he to them again: All which rather exaſperated the Differences. And now came up the Names of Parties, Royaliſts, and Parliamentarians; Cavaliers, and Roundheads.

The King goes to Nottingham, and ſummoneth and careſſeth the Freeholders of the County, and promiſeth to act according to the Proteſtation at York, the like he did at Lincoln. And July 11, Meſſage. ſends a Meſſage to the Parliament, Of his intentions to reduce Hull, if it be not rendred to him; which if they do, he will admit of their farther Propoſitions.

He complains of Hotham's Actions, for which he will puniſh him; and of the Earl of Warwick's taking upon him the Command of the Fleet: who had got in the Sea-men to him, and put by Sir John Pennington, and took a Ship of Ammunition coming to the King from Holland. 18 Car. Earl of Warwick.

Lord Willoughby. The Lord Willoughby of Parham being Lieutenant of Lincolnſhire, was there putting the Militia into a Poſture; which being informed to the King, he wrote to the Lord Willoughby to deſiſt from that action; and the Lord Willoughby returned an humble, ingenious and weighty Anſwer to his Majeſty, to excuſe his not performing at preſent what the King required of him; which he ſaid was not in his power to do, without Breach of that Truſt which he had undertaken to the Parliament, and to which he was encouraged by the Opinion of ſome of his Majeſty's great Officers, eminent in the knowledge of the Laws, wherein he was not learned.

After this, he proceeded in executing the Ordinance for the Militia, and the King was not ſo ſevere againſt him, as againſt others.

The Parliament now thought it high time to provide for their own Defence, and to raiſe an Army for that purpoſe

Upon the Debate whereof, I declared my Opinion to this effect.

Mr. Speaker,

" The Queſtion which was laſt propounded " about raiſing of Forces, naming a General, and " Officers of an Army, hath been very rare be- " fore this time, in this Aſſembly, and it ſeems " to me to ſet us at the Pits-brink, ready to " plunge our ſelves into an Ocean of Troubles " and Miſeries, and if it could be, into more " than a Civil War brings with it.

" Give me leave, Sir, to conſider this unhappy " Subject in the beginning, progreſs, and iſſue " of it.

" Cæſar tells us (and he knew as much of Civil " War as any Man before him) that it cannot be " begun ſine malis artibus.

" Surely, Sir, our Enemies of the Popiſh " Church have left no evil Arts uneſſayed, to " bring us to our preſent Poſture, and will yet " leave none unattempted to make our Breaches " wider, well knowing that nothing will more " advance their Empire, than our Diviſions.

" Our Miſery whom they account Hereticks, is " their Joy, and our Diſtractions will be their " glory, and all evil arts and ways to bring Ca- " lamities upon us, they will eſteem meritorious.

" But, Sir, I look upon another beginning of " our Civil War; God bleſſed us with a long " and flouriſhing Peace, and we turned his Grace " into Wantonneſs, and Peace would not ſatisfy " us without Luxury, nor our Plenty without " Debauchery: inſtead of Sobriety and Thank- " fulneſs for our Mercies, we provoked the Giver " of them by our ſins and wickedneſs, to puniſh " us (as we may fear) by a Civil War, to make us " Executioners of Divine Vengeance upon our " ſelves.

" It is ſtrange to note, how we have inſenſibly " ſlid into this beginning of a Civil War, by one " unexpected Accident after another, as Waves " of the Sea, which have brought us thus far: " And we ſcarce know how, but from Paper " Combates, by Declarations, Remonſtrances, " Proteſtations, Votes, Meſſages, Anſwers and " Replies; We are now come to the Queſtion of " raiſing Forces, and naming a General, and " Officers of an Army.

" But what, Sir, may be the progreſs hereof, " the Poet tells you,

Juſque

Juſque datum ſceleri Canimus, populumque potentem
In ſua victrici converſum viſcera dextra.

" We muſt ſurrender up our Laws, Liberties, " Properties and Lives into the Hands of inſolent " Mercenaries, whoſe rage and violence will " command us, and all we have, and Reaſon, " Honour and Juſtice will leave our Land; the " Ignoble will rule the Noble, and Baſeneſs will " be preferred before Virtue, Profaneneſs before " Piety.

" Of a Potent People we ſhall make our ſelves " weak, and be the Inſtruments of our own " Ruin, perditio tua ex te, will be ſaid to us; we " ſhall burn our own Houſes, lay waſte our own " Fields, pillage our own Goods, open our own " Veins, and eat out our own Bowels.

" You will hear other ſounds, beſides thoſe of " Drums and Trumpets, the clattering of Armour, the roaring of Guns, the groans of " wounded and dying Men, the ſhrieks of de- " flowred Women, the cries of Widows and " Orphans, and all on your account, which " makes it the more to be lamented.

" Pardon, Sir, the warmth of my expreſſion " on this Argument, it is to prevent a Flame, " which I ſee kindled in the midſt of us, that " may conſume us to Aſhes. The ſum of the " progreſs of Civil War is the rage of Fire and " Sword, and (which is worſe) of brutiſh Men.

" What the Iſſue of it will be, no Man alive " can tell, probably few of us now here may " live to ſee the end of it. It hath been ſaid, He " that draws his Sword againſt his Prince, muſt " throw away the Scabberd: Thoſe Differences " are ſcarce to be reconciled; theſe Commotions " are like the deep Seas, being once ſtirred, are " not ſoon appeaſed.

" I wiſh the Obſervation of the Duke de Rohan " in his Intereſt of Chriſtendom, may prove a Cau- " tion, not a Prophecy. He ſaith of England, " That it is a great Creature, which cannot be de- " ſtroyed, but by its own hand. And there is not " a more likely Hand than that of Civil War to " do it.

" The Iſſue of all War is like a Caſt at Dice, " none can tell upon what ſquare the Alea belli " will light. The beſt Iſſue that can be ex- " pected of a Civil War, Ubi victor flet, & victus perit; which of theſe will be our portion " is uncertain, and the choice would be avoided.

" Yet, Sir, when I have ſaid this, I am not " for a tame reſignation of our Religion, Lives " and Liberties, into the hands of our Adver- " ſaries, who ſeek to devour us. Nor do I " think it inconſiſtent with your great Wiſdom, " to prepare for a juſt and neceſſary Defence of " them.

" It was truly obſerved by a Noble Gentle- " man, That if our Enemies find us provided to " reſiſt their Attempts upon us, it will be the like- " lieſt way to bring them to an Accord with us. And " upon this ground I am for the Queſtion.

" But I humbly move you to conſider, whether " it be not yet too ſoon to come to it. We have " tried by Propoſals of Peace to his Majeſty, and " they have been rejected: Let us try yet again, " and appoint a Committee who may review " our former Propoſitions.

" And where they find the matter of them (as " our Affairs now are) fit to be altered, that " they preſent the Alterations to the Houſe, and " their Opinions; and that, as far as may ſtand " with the Security of Us and our Cauſe, we may " yield our Endeavours to prevent the Miſeries " which look black upon us, and to ſettle a " good Accommodation; ſo that there may be no " Strife between us and thoſe of the other Party, " for we are Brethren."

18 Car.

After great Debate it was voted, That an Army ſhould be raiſed for the Defence of King and Parliament: That the Earl of Eſſex ſhould be Captain General of this Army, and the Earl of Bedford to be General of the Horſe. Votes for an Army.

A Committee was appointed of both Houſes to confer with the General, and to nominate Colonels, Field Officers and Captains of this Army.

The Earl of Holland, Sir John Holland and Sir Philip Stapleton, were ſent with a Petition to the King to Beverly, To diſband his Forces, recall his Commiſſions of Array, diſmiſs his Guards, and to return to his Parliament: All which he refuſed. Petition.

The Parliament were furniſhed with Money by Loans upon the Publick Faith, and by the endeavours of ſundry Miniſters, and others: a great quantity of Money, Plate and Ammunition was brought in, even by ſome poor Women, to their Wedding Rings and Bodkins. Money rais'd.

The King was furniſhed with Moneys from the Queen, upon the pawned Jewels, and by Contributions from the Cavalier Lords and Gentlemen, and a Loan from Oxford Univerſity.

The King removed from Beverley to Leiceſter, where he courted the Inhabitants: But the Earl of Stamford was there proclaimed Traitor, for he removed the County Magazine to his Houſe, and ſet Guards about it; but the Parliament vindicated him by a Declaration.

The King raiſes and arms a Regiment in Yorkſhire for the Prince. The Parliament declare all the Commiſſioners of Array to be Traitors, and order them to be apprehended. And the King proclaims Eſſex, and all the Colonels and Officers of his Army, who ſhould not inſtantly lay down Arms, to be Rebels and Traitors: And orders Marquiſs Hertford his Lieutenant General, to march againſt General Eſſex. Several proclaim'd Traitors.

Auguſt 12. The King pubiſhed his Proclamation, and Declaration very large, in ſetting forth what he had done, in favour of the People, and ſatisfaction of the Deſires of the Parliament; then the evil Actions of the Parliament againſt him; and in all juſtifies his own, and condemns the Parliament's Proceedings. And is to be ſeen in Print. Declaration.

The Parliament took 100000 l. of the 400000 l. voted to be raiſed for Ireland, which the King remembers, and they juſtify and recriminate the King's hindrance of the Iriſh Buſineſs, and ſay, That ſome of his Counſellors fomented that Rebellion, and they promiſe ſatisfaction out of Delinquents Eſtates to thoſe who ſhall receive damage from the King's Party.

Auguſt 22. The King at Nottingham erects his Standard, to which not ſo many reſorted as was expected. Three days after, he ſends Propoſitions to the Parliament by the Earl of Southampton, Sir John Culpepper and Sir William Udall, Members of Parliament, but they were not admitted to ſit in the Houſe. Standard at Nottingham. Meſſage.

The Parliament gave Anſwer to this Meſſage, That till the King recall his Proclamations of Treaſon againſt Eſſex and the reſt, and take down his Standard, they can give no other Anſwer. Anſwer.

The King replies, That he never intended to declare the Parliament Traitors, nor ſet up his Standard againſt them: But if Proclamations of Traitors be recalled by them he will recall his, and take down his Standard. Reply.

They

Anno 1642. They deſire him to put away his evil Counſellors; and to return to his Parliament: And vote, That the Arms of the Parliament for Religion, Laws, and Liberties of the Kingdom, ſhall not be laid down, till Delinquents be left to Juſtice; that their Eſtates may diſcharge the Debts of the Commonwealth.

Vote.

The Soldiers commit Outrages, which the King and Parliament labour to rectify. Sir Thomas Barrington, and Mr. Grimſtone in Eſſex, ſeize upon Sir John Lucas, and his Lady, and commit them to Priſons; and Lucas is proclaimed Traitor.

The Parliament for Repayment of Loans upon Publick Faith, order Satisfaction out of the Eſtates of Delinquents.

The Lord Strange is impeached of High Treaſon, for raiſing Lancaſhire-men, by whom one Percivall was killed.

The King adjourned Michaelmas-Term, and proclaims Nichols, Macworth, and Hunt of Shropſhire, to be Traitors.

The Lord Fairfax and Mr. Bellaſis conclude a Neutrality for Yorkſhire, but the Parliament declare the Lord Fairfax not bound to obſerve the Articles, but to aſſiſt the Parliament.

Colours. The Earl of Eſſex's Colours was a deep Yellow, others ſetting up another Colour, were held Malignants, and ill-affected to the Parliament's Cauſe. So ſmall a thing is taken notice of in the Jealouſies of War.

Intelligence being given to the Houſe of Commons, that the Earl of Berkſhire, and divers Gentlemen of principal Quality in Oxfordſhire, intended ſhortly to put in execution the King's Commiſſion of Array at Wattleton.

They commanded me to uſe my utmoſt Endeavours to prevent the execution of that Commiſſion in Oxfordſhire, and to apprehend ſuch of the Commiſſioners as ſhould meet for that purpoſe: And the better to enable me hereunto, they ordered ſome of the Regiment of Horſe of Colonel Goodwyn, and ſome of the Regiment of Foot of Colonel Hampden, to attend my Commands.

The Commiſſioners of Array having appointed their Meeting at Wattleton at a Day, and the Country ſummoned to come in to them; I ſent for the Forces appointed to meet me; and in the Afternoon came to me a Troop of Horſe, and a Company of Foot, and Hampden himſelf with them; and when we were met, we had Information that the Commiſſioners having notice of the Parliament's Forces being in the Field, thought not fit to continue at Wattleton, but brake off their Buſineſs, and not taking leave, or diſmiſſing the Country, the Commiſſioners with their Company haſtened to Sir Robert Dormer's Houſe, and thither they were purſued; and when the Parliament's Company beleagured the Houſe, they fired ſome Muſquets and Piſtols at us; but finding themſelves too weak for our Party, and that we went about to ſtorm the Houſe, they preſently yielded upon quarter.

Moſt of the Commiſſioners of Array were got away, only the Earl of Berkſhire, and two or three more were taken, and conveyed to London.

The Houſe of Lords committed the Earl, and the reſt to Priſon, where he lay for a long time after.

The King's General was firſt, the Marqueſs of Hertford, and ſhortly after the Earl of Lindſey;

Hull. divers of his Forces quartered near Hull, ſeemed as if they had ſome deſign of beleaguering it.

Sir John Hotham, and Sir John Meldram his Aſſiſtant, ſallied out upon them, ſurprized them, killed ſome, and took others Priſoners: and ſhortly after having a ſupply of five hundred Men from London, they ſallied out again, and diſcomfited ſome of their Forces, and burnt a Barn, with ſome Ammunition of the King's in it; and this was the firſt Place where Blood was drawn in this Conteſt. 18 Car.

The King marched from Nottingham to Stafford, and Leiceſter, and ſo to Wales; and at Shrewsbury his Army increaſed to a conſiderable Body.

The Parliament Forces rendezvous'd at St. Albans, and from thence marched Northward to meet the King with a Petition from both Houſes, and theſe Directions to their General. Directions to the General.

1. To reſtrain all Profaneneſs in the Army.

2. To march and fight the King's Army, and by Battle, or otherwiſe, to reſcue his Perſon, and the Prince, and Duke of York, from thoſe about him.

3. To preſent the Petition to his Majeſty, and if he ſhall pleaſe to withdraw himſelf from his Army, and reſort to his Parliament, then to cauſe thoſe Forces to disband and to guard the King in his Return.

4. To declare Pardon to thoſe that will withdraw from the King, except Richmond, Cumberland, Newcaſtle, Rivers, Caernarvan, Newark, Falkland, Nichols, Porter and Hyde.

5. To receive, and certify Contributions to be repaid.

6. To protect the good People, and to reſtore their Loſſes.

7. To apprehend Traitors and Delinquents.

8. To obſerve further Directions.

He had a Committee with him, who with the General were to take Subſcriptions of Loans, and order Matters concerning Malignants, and to conſider of the good of the Army.

The Parliament finding Supplies, and Officers ſent by the Queen from Holland to the King; they ſent over to the States, Mr. Strickland, to be their Reſident in the Low Countries, and with him a Declaration from the Lords and Commons, in the penning whereof I was imploy'd; it is in Print.

The Effect of it was, To acquaint them with the Affairs and Proceedings of the Parliament, and that it was not expected, that they who had formerly received the Aſſiſtance of the Engliſh, to recover their Liberty, ſhould now aſſiſt thoſe whoſe deſign was to deprive the Engliſh Nation of their Rights and Liberties. Declaration.

Goring held Portſmouth for the King, and hearing the County Trained Bands deſigned to ſurprize it, he met and skirmiſhed with them and retired to the Town, but Sir John Mayrick's Regiment, and a Troop of Horſe being ſent by the Parliament to join with the Country, they ſo ſtraitned Goring, that, though Marqueſs Hertford haſtened to his Relief, yet he ſurrendred the Town, and took Ship for Holland.

The Marqueſs giving a Bruſh to the Earl of Bedford by the way, ſeized upon Sherburn Caſtle, and from thence marched to the King to Shrewsbury.

Sir John Biron with ſome Troops for the King was unexpectedly ſet upon at Brackley by the Towns-men, and ſome Troops of the Parliament, in his March to Oxford, by whom he received ſome loſs, yet came on to Oxford.

The Lord Say, Lieutenant of Oxfordſhire, being then in the Country, upon this Alarm, ſent to me

Anno 1642. me and the reſt of his Deputy-Lieutenants, to bring what Forces we could to meet him near Oxford to remove the Lord Biron.

I had a gallant Company of Horſe of my Neighbours under my Command; and the Day before I march'd out, Mr. Ruſſel Son of Sir William Ruſſel, who had been Treaſurer of the Navy to the King, came to me to Henley; he was a Member of the Houſe of Commons, and was marching towards the Army, himſelf well armed, and 12 of his Servants in ſcarlet Cloaks, well horſed and armed: He only called upon me by the way to give me a Viſit, and finding upon what Service I was engaged, he accompanied me. When I came near Oxford my Scouts brought me Intelligence that the Lord Say with a Regiment of Dragoons, and the Lord St. John with him, and ſeveral Companies of his Regiment of Foot were upon their march towards the Place appointed for our Rendezvous; but that Sir John Biron, hearing of our approach, had quitted the Town.

I went on till I met the Lord Say, and with him were the Lord St. John, the Lord Weenman, and moſt of his Deputy-Lieutenants; and our Forces were in all above 3000 Horſe, and Dragoons, and Foot, with whom we entred the City without any Reſiſtance, and were welcomed by the Townsmen, more than by the Scholars. Oxford.

Yet beſides the Mayor and Aldermen, the Vice-Chancellor and Heads of Houſes, and Proctors, gave my Lord Say a Viſit; and proteſted, all of them, their Duty to the Parliament, their Deſires of Peace, and engaged themſelves not to act any thing againſt the Parliament.

The Officers of the Forces in Council with the Lord Lieutenant, debated the Conſequence of this Place, the Strength of its Situation, the Plenty of the Country, the nearneſs to London, and the Diſaffection of the Univerſity to the Parliament's Cauſe.

That the King by his coming to Shrewsbury, and looking this way, and becauſe of the Conveniency of the Place might probably make this a principal Quarter for his Forces, and fortify the City, which would prove a great Prejudice to the Parliament.

To prevent which, I propounded to the Lord Lieutenant to take a Courſe that the Scholars might not ſupply His Majeſty if he came thither, or rather to fortify the City, and place a good Garriſon here under a Governor whom his Lordſhip might truſt with ſo important a Place as this was. And I was named to be a fit Perſon to be the Governor, and one whom both the City, and the Univerſity, and the Country thereabouts did well know, and would be pleaſed with; and the Scholars the more becauſe they knew me to be a Scholar, and a Member of this Univerſity. But the Lord Say ſhewed no forwardneſs to fortify and make this City a Garriſon.

This being ſpoken of abroad, divers of the Neighbours offered to bring in 1000 Men at any time within a day's Warning, to be under my Command in the Garriſon; and the Towns-men were very forward to engage, ſo I might be Governor: But the Lord Say declined it, pretending favour to the Univerſity and Country, and the Improbability in his Opinion, that the King would ſettle there, though that which follows in this Story will ſhew what a great Error was committed in not fortifying this Place for the Parliament, as it might eaſily have been done at this time: And ſurely the Lord Lieutenant though a Perſon of great Parts, Wiſdom and Integrity, yet did much fail in this particular.

Some of the Company moved his Lordſhip to ſeiſe upon, or to ſecure the Plate in the ſeveral Colleges, that it might not be made uſe of by the King, if he ſhould come thither, but he did not think fit to do it; only, he and his Deputy Lieutenants went to the ſeveral Colleges, and took an Engagement, and Promiſe from the reſpective Heads, That their Plate ſhould be forth coming, and ſhould not be made uſe of by the King againſt the Parliament. 18 Car.

Many with his Lordſhip, were unſatisfied with this his favour to the Univerſity, and foretold the ill Conſequences of it, which afterwards happened to the prejudice of the Parliament.

But his Lordſhip had the ſole Power in himſelf, and thus carried all this Buſineſs, for which he had no thanks from either Party.

Sir John Biron marched away from Oxford with 500 Horſe to Worceſter, and took in the Town for the King.

About the beginning of November, the two Princes Palatine, Rupert and Maurice, arrived in England; and were put into Command, in the Army of the King their Uncle, who had now gotten together a potent Army, to whom he made a Speech, declaring his Intentions to preſerve the Proteſtant Religion, Laws, and Liberties of his Subjects, and Privileges of Parliament. King's Speech.

Sept. 9. 1642. The Earl of Eſſex in much State, accompanied by many of both Houſes of Parliament, ſets out from London to St. Albans, from thence to Northampton, where his Forces met him, and they were together above 15000 Men.

The Parliament's Petition which he carried with him, was refuſed to be received by the King, who now had furniſhed himſelf with Store of Money, by melting, in his new Mint in Wales, the Plate which was brought in to him, in great Quantities, and from thence he marcheth towards London.

The Parliament having notice thereof, order the Trained Bands to be in readineſs, and fortify the Paſſages about the City, with Poſts, Chains, and Courts of Guard; and it was wonderful to ſee how the Women, and Children, and vaſt numbers of People would come to work, about digging, and carrying of Earth, to make their new Fortifications.

The Parliament vote thoſe that will not contribute to their Charges, to be ſecured and diſarmed. Mr. Fountaine the Lawyer was for his Refuſal committed; but afterwards, as will appear in the Progreſs of this Story, he, and many others refuſed, and again aſſiſted on both ſides, as they ſaw the Wind to blow. Votes.

The Parliament appoint a Committee for the Sequeſtration of the Lands of Biſhops, and of Deans and Chapters, and of the King's Revenues, to be employed for defence of the Commonwealth.

Colonel Nathaniel Fines, with ſome Forces raiſed by the Lord Say, and Colonel Sandys, marched to Worceſter, to remove Sir John Biron from thence; and expected General Eſſex to ſecond them; but inſtead of him, came Prince Rupert, and ſlew and routed all the Parliament Party. Sandys was taken Priſoner, and ſhortly after died of his Wounds.

Eſſex coming on with his Army, after he had garriſon'd Northampton, Coventry, and Warwick; Rupert and Biron thought fit to quit Worceſter to him; and Eſſex ſent from thence the Earl of Stamford with a Party to Hereford, to hinder the Forces of South Wales from joining with the King.

Stamford marches from Hereford to Glouceſter, and called away from thence, leaves Maſſey Governor there. Colonel Tho. Eſſex is ſent to garriſon Briſtol, and left Governor of Worceſter. Some Forces

Anno 1642. Forces are ſent to Kidderminſter, and Beaudley, to join with the Lord Wharton's Regiment, and Sir Henry Cholmley's; and at Coventry, and Warwick lay the Lord Peterburgh, Sir William Conſtable, and Colonel Brown, with their Regiments, to oppoſe the King's March to London: And at Yarmouth they ſeized a Ship with 140 Cavaliers, and 300 Barrels of Powder, ſent from Holland to the King.

Yorkſhire. In Yorkſhire the King's Party grew ſtrong, under the Earl of Cumberland, Sir Francis Worſley, Sir Marmaduke Langdale, Sir Thomas Glenham, Mr. Nevill, and others, who forced Hotham to retreat to Hull.

Cornwal. In Cornwal under Sir Ralph Hopton their General, Sir Nich. Slanning, Sir Bevill Greenville, and others, they poſſeſſed Launceſton for the King, and with a conſiderable Body oppoſed the Parliamentarians. In Wales the Earl of Worceſter raiſed a great Number of Welch, and marched to the King.

The King having gained a Days March of Eſſex towards London, Eſſex finding his Error of ſo long a Stay at Worceſter, haſtens after the King.

The Parliament, and their Party, were not a little troubled at the King's March towards the City, and the Suſpicion of a great Party hereabouts that would join with him, and had invited him this Way, they uſed all Means to ſtop his March, and to haſten General Eſſex after him.

They ſent down their Members Deputy Lieutenants into ſeveral Counties towards the Army, to gather together ſuch Forces as were raiſed, and to ſend them to their General, and to raiſe ſuch further as they could.

Octob. 24. Intelligence was brought from Uxbridge Road that divers of the Officers, and Soldiers of the Parliament's Army, particularly Sir James Ramſey, a Scot, who commanded a Regiment of Horſe under Eſſex, rode haſtily this Morning through Uxbridge, and upon that rode towards London, and reported, That the Parliament's Army was broken, and wholly diſcomfited, and many of the Officers ſlain, and taken Priſoners.

Other Scouts brought other Intelligence quite different from the former, and much more welcome. They had it from divers upon the Road who were galloping to London with the News, That the Earl of Eſſex had totally routed the King's Army, killed, and taken many of them, and gained a full Victory. At this Battle the Parliament had a great Deliverance, and a ſmall Victory, the particular Paſſages were thus: The King diſdaining to be purſued by Eſſex, turns back to meet him, and Octob. 23. being Sunday, both the Armies drew into the Field, between Kineton and Edge-hill, in Warwickſhire. The King had the Top of the Hill, from whence he viewed the Parliament's Army, who ſaluted him with three Pieces of Cannon; which was anſwered with two ſhot of the Kings.

Edge-hill Fight.

The Fight began about two a Clock in the Afternoon, the Generals of both Armies performed their Parts with great Courage and Gallantry, leading on their Forces with Pikes in their Hands, but were adviſed to change that Poſture, as fitter for a private Soldier, than for a General.

The greateſt Body of the King's Horſe was in his Right Wing, commanded by Prince Rupert, who furiouſly charged the Left Wing of the Parliament, commanded by Commiſſary General Ramſey; whom he routed, and purſued to Kineton down with great Slaughter.

But the Left Wing of the King's Horſe had not the ſame Succeſs, but was broken, and routed by the Right Wing of the Parliament's Horſe, commanded by Sir William Balfour, Sir Philip Stapleton, the Lord Fielding, and Colonel Hurrey.

General Lindſey being far engaged, was taken Priſoner, and died preſently after of his Wounds; with him was taken the Lord Willoughby of Ersby, his Son, Sir Edmund Verney the Standard-bearer was ſlain, and the Standard taken, and reſcued again by Mr. John Smith, who was knighted for it, and made Standard-bearer. 18 Car.

Both Armies, Horſe and Foot performed their Parts with great Valour and Bravery, Night parted the Fight, and both Armies retreat, each counting themſelves Victors. On both Sides were loſt between 5000 and 6000 Men.

On the King's Side the General Lindſey, and Sir Edmund Verney; on the Parliament's Part Colonel Thomas Eſſex, and Lieutenant Colonel Ramſey, and the Lord St. John, taken Priſoner, ſoon after died.

The King marched toward Aino, Eſſex kept upon the Place where the Battle was fought, and the next Day marched towards Coventry.

Some of his Friends were very much againſt his marching thither, but rather adviſed him to purſue the King, and to make a freſh Attack upon him: There being come into Eſſex after the Battle, three freſh Regiments, The Lord Willoughby of Parham his Regiment of Horſe, and the two Regiments of Foot of Hollis, and Hampden, gallant, ſtout and freſh Regiments.

But Eſſex was diſſuaded from it by Colonel Dalbier, and ſome others; but the three freſh Colonels, Stapleton, and ſeveral others adviſed it; and probably had he with theſe freſh Forces made a new Aſſault upon the King's diſordered and tired Army, it might have gone far to have put an Iſſue to the Buſineſs.

Upon the News of this Battle all Countries were alarmed and frighted, being a ſtrange thing in England.

From Aino, Octob. 27. The King ſends a Proclamation of Pardon to the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, excepting only Fulke and Manwaring.

Banbury Town and Caſtle ſurrendred without Blows to the King, two Foot Regiments, and a Troop of Horſe there of the Parliaments took up Arms for the King, who now brought his whole Army to Oxford; and thereby the Error of the Lord Say, in not fortifying this Place before when it was in his Power, for the Parliament, was the more evident. The King at Oxford.

Prince Rupert takes in the Lord Say's Houſe at Broughton, and made Excurſions near London, which cauſed the Parliament to order Eſſex to bring his Army near London for their Safeguard: which he did, and was honourably received at Weſtminſter, Novemb. the 7th, and preſented with a Gratuity of 5000 l. and a Declaration of his valiant and acceptable Service in the bloody Battle of Edge-hill. Eſſex.

The Papiſts of Lancaſhire were allowed to bear Arms, which in many Proteſtants wrought a Cenſure on the King, for too much favouring, and entertaining them in his Army.

The Parliament order, That all Apprentices who will liſt themſelves in their Army, ſhall have their time of that Service for their Freedom: Which brought many of them into their Army; they alſo invite the Scots to come in to their Aſſiſtance, which the King ſeeks to prevent, but in vain.

Prince Rupert ranged abroad with great Parties, who committed ſtrange Inſolences, and Violences, upon the Country: At Ailesbury he failed of his Deſign, by the Care and Stoutneſs of Colonel Bulſtrode Governor there.

The King takes a Reſolution, and not without Grounds of Reaſon, to advance to London, and all his Anno 1642. his Army marcheth to Reading, Henley, and thoſe Parts; Prince Rupert's Brigade quartered at Henley, and of them a Regiment of Horſe at my Houſe at Fawley-Court.

Sir John Biron and his Brothers commanded thoſe Horſe, and gave order that they ſhould commit no Inſolence at my Houſe, nor plunder my Goods; but Soldiers are not eaſily govern'd againſt their Plunder, or perſuaded to reſtrain it, for there being about 1000 of the King's Horſe quarter'd in and about the Houſe, and none but Servants there, there was no Inſolence or Outrage uſually committed by common Soldiers on a reputed Enemy, which was omitted by theſe brutiſh Fellows at my Houſe. There they had their Whores with them, they ſpent and conſumed 100 Load of Corn and Hay, littered their Horſes with Sheaves of good Wheat, and gave them all Sorts of Corn in the Straw: Divers Writings of Conſequence, and Books which were left in my Study, ſome of them they tore in Pieces, others they burnt to light their Tobacco, and ſome they carried away with them, to my extreme great Loſs and Prejudice, in wanting the Writings of my Eſtate, and loſing very many excellent Manuſcripts of my Fathers and others, and ſome of my own Labours.

They broke down my Park Pales, killed moſt of my Deer, though Raſcal and Carrion, and let out all the reſt, only a tame young Stag, they carried away and preſented to Prince Rupert, and my Hounds which were extraordinary good. They eat and drank up all that the Houſe could afford, broke up all Trunks, Cheſts, and Places; and where they found Linen or any Houſholdſtuff they took it away with them, and cutting the Beds, let out the Feathers, and took away the Ticks. They likewiſe carried away my Coach, and four good Horſes, and all my ſaddle Horſes, and did all the Miſchief and Spoil, that Malice and Enmity could provoke barbarous Mercenaries to commit, and ſo they parted.

This is remembred only to raiſe a conſtant Hatred of any thing that may in the leaſt tend to the fomenting of ſuch Unhappineſs and Miſery.

An Addreſs for Peace. The King marched forward with his great Army towards London, and the Parliament having voted an Addreſs to him for Peace, deſired a ſafe Conduct for the Earls of Northumberland, and Pembroke, and for Mr. Pierpoint, the Lord Weenman, Sir John Evelyn, and Sir John Hippſley, to preſent their Petition to his Majeſty.

But he excepted againſt Sir John Evelyn, becauſe he had proclaimed him Traitor, which ſo irritated the Houſes, that they voted it a Refuſal of a Treaty, and acquainted the City therewith.

Petition. But afterwards the Petition was ſent to the King at Colnebrook, by the other Commiſſioners without Sir John Evelyn, and was to deſire him to appoint his Reſidence in ſome Place near London, where the Commiſſioners of Parliament might attend him with Propoſitions of a Peace, and the King appointed his Caſtle of Windſor for that purpoſe, and deſired that the Treaty might be ſpeeded,

The Commiſſioners of Parliament being newly departed from the King, he was informed, That Eſſex had drawn forth his Cannon, and Forces out of London, and was adviſed to take in Brentford; whither he advanced the ſame Night.

There were quartered Part of the Regiment of Colonel Hollis, who were very ſtout Men, as appeared by the Reſiſtance which they made to the King's Forces, and though many of them were ſlain, and divers driven into the River, and drowned, being mightily overpowered with Numbers; yet they defended themſelves, till the Lord Brook's, and Hampden's Regiment came in to their Relief: and when Night came on, they quitted the Town, and the King poſſeſſed it. 18 Car.

This being known to the Parliament Nov. 13. they ſent a Committee to the City to move them to ſend forth their Trained Bands the next Day to join with Eſſex for defence of the City and Parliament, againſt the King's Forces at Brentford.

The City were in much Trouble, and different Opinions, but the Lord Mayor Pennington, and Officers of the Militia, named by the Parliament were ſo forward, that what was deſired was reſolved by the City.

General Eſſex was adviſed to order ſome of his Horſe and Foot to the number of about 3000 who then were quartered at Kingſton, that they ſhould march to Hunſloe, and be on that ſide of the King's Army, and Eſſex with his Party, and the City Forces to advance on the other ſide of them from London, and ſo the Army of the King would be encompaſſed between theſe two ſtrong Parties of the Parliament Forces, which doubtleſs would have been a very great Advantage to the Parliament Forces.

But Dalbier chiefly, and Sir John Mayricke, and others gave contrary Advice, which was followed, and the Forces at Kingſton commanded to march round about by London-Bridge into London, and from thence to join with the Parliament Army; whereby they came late and tired when they were to have done Service.

The City Bands marched forth very chearfully under the Command of Major General Skippon, who made ſhort, and encouraging Speeches to his Soldiers, which were to this purpoſe.

Skippon's Speeches. Come my Boys, my brave Boys, let us pray heartily and fight heartily, I will run the ſame Fortunes and Hazards with you, remember the Cauſe is for God; and for the Defence of your ſelves, your Wives, and Children: Come my honeſt brave Boys, pray heartily and fight heartily, and God will bleſs us.

Thus he went all along with the Soldiers, talking to them, ſometimes to one Company, and ſometimes to another; and the Soldiers ſeemed to be more taken with it, then with a ſet, formal Oration.

Beyond Hammerſmith in a Lane were placed the great Guns ready to be drawn up as there ſhould be occaſion, and a little beyond that were the Carriages, in a Field cloſe to the Highway, placed with great Guards about them for their defence. The whole Army was drawn up in Battalia in a Common called Turnham-Green, about a Mile from Brentford. Eſſex had there a ſtrong Party of Horſe, ſtout Men, well horſed and armed; Sir Philip Stapleton's Regiment, and Colonel Goodwin's Regiments of Horſe, had the Van. Turnham-Green.

The other Regiments of Horſe were placed on both Wings, the Foot of the Army were in good plight, and well armed; and were placed in the Body one Regiment of them, and another of the City Band, one by another, and ſome were left for Reſerves.

The Order and Marſhaling of them was chiefly by the Earl of Holland, who took great Pains, and ſhewed good Skill in Martial Affairs: With him were the Earl of Northumberland, and moſt of the Lords who continued with the Parliament, and divers Members of the Houſe of Commons, and all were armed.

The General Eſſex likewiſe took great Pains in the Field, and accompanied with the Lords and Commons with him, rode from Regiment to Regiment encouraging of them; and when he had ſpoken to them, the Soldiers would throw up their Caps, and ſhout, crying, Hey for old Robin.

The whole Army of Horſe and Foot, conſiſted of above 24000 Men; ſtout, gallant, proper Men, as well habited and armed, as were ever ſeen in any Army, and ſeemed to be in as good Courage to fight the Enemy.

The General Eſſex, and the Lords, and others with him upon Conſultation together in the Field, thought fit to command a Party of two Regiments of Horſe, and four of Foot to march about from the Green by Acton, and ſo to get beyond the King's Army, and upon a Sign when they fell upon the King's Army on that Side, Eſſex and his Forces were to fall upon them on this Side, and ſo to have them between both Parties of their Army.

Accordingly Orders were given, and Hampden's Regiment being one of that Party which were to go about, I marched with them, they had the Van next to the Horſe, and after we had marched about a Mile on our Way, and the Enemy began to gaze on us, Sir John Meyricke Major General to Eſſex rode galloping after us.

When he had overtaken us, he told us, that the General had changed his Reſolution of dividing his Forces, and had ſent him expreſly to command us to retreat back again to the reſt of the Army: At which we were exceedingly troubled, and wondered how this ſhould come to paſs that we ſhould be recall'd, and loſe ſo great an Advantage againſt the Enemy, and it was fear'd that ſome who were falſe had given this Advice to the General.

We all retreated according to Command to Turnham-Green, where the whole Army ſtood many Hours in Battalia, as the King's Army had done, facing one another.

Whenſoever either of them advanced towards the other, or that the Soldiers ſhouted, then 2 or 300 Horſemen, who came from London to be Spectators, would gallop away towards London as faſt as they could ride, to the Diſcouragement of the Parliament's Army; and divers of the Soldiers would ſteal from their Colours towards their home, the City.

It was then conſulted whether the Parliament Army ſhould advance, and fall upon the King's Forces, which was the Opinion of moſt of the Parliament-men, and Gentlemen, who were Officers; but the Soldiers of Fortune were altogether againſt it; and while we were conſulting the King had drawn off his Carriages, and Ordnance, and when every one ſpake his Opinion, the General gave his Orders as he thought beſt.

The City Good-wives, and others, mindful of their Husbands and Friends, ſent many Cart-loads of Proviſions, and Wines, and good things to Turnham-Green, with which the Soldiers were refreſhed, and made merry; and the more, when they underſtood that the King, and all his Army were retreated.

The King's Forces retreat.

Upon this was another Conſultation whether we ſhould purſue them, which all adviſed, but the old Soldiers of Fortune: on whoſe Judgment the General moſt relied; and their Reaſons were, That it was too hazardous to follow the Enemy, and Honour and Safety enough to the Parliament that the King was retreated.

But ſome of the King's Party did afterwards confeſs to me and others, that if we had fallen on them at this time, they had not Bullet enough to have maintained Fight for a quarter of an Hour, but that, in probability, we had wholly broken them, and that this was the Cauſe of their Retreat. And God had a farther Controverſy yet againſt us.

The King being marched away, the General gave Orders for the Citizens to go home, which they gladly obeyed; to return to their Wives and Families that Night. 18 Car.

The King marched back to Colnebrook, from thence to Reading, and ſo to Oxford, his moſt convenient Quarter.

This Action of the King, in the time of a Treaty, was ſo ill reſented by many Men, that they ſpake very hardly of it; and the Parliament voted that they would have no Accommmodation. Vote.

Yet upon a Meſſage from him, that he intended to march at ſuch a diſtance from London, as might take away all Miſapprehenſion, and not hinder the preparing of their Propoſitions. Meſſage.

They again ſend a Petition to him to deſert his Army, and to return to his Parliament. Petition.

In the mean time Letters from Holland to the King are intercepted, whereby Notice is given him of ſtore of Ammunition and Money, ſent to him from thence, and of an Ambaſſador coming from Denmark to the King, and Colonel Cockeram with him. Letters intercepted.

The Earl of Newcaſtle, in the North hath great Forces for the King, and overpowered the Lord Fairfax.

Norfolk, Suffolk, Eſſex, Hertford, Cambridge and Ely, aſſociate under the Lord Grey of Warke, for the Parliament. Wincheſter and Cheſter are gained by the Parliament's Forces.

Goring lands with the Queen's Standard, and ſtore of Officers and Ammunition from Holland, and joins with Newcaſtle.

The City of London petition the King profeſſing their Grief for his diſtruſt of them, and their Loyalty to him, he anſwers, that he hath a good Opinion of many of them, and could willingly pardon all, except Pennington, Ven, Fowke, and Manwaring; and he threatens ſuch as ſhall continue to aſſiſt his Adverſaries. Petition. Anſwer.

The City were put in heart again by the Speeches of Mr. Pym, and the Committee of Parliament to their Common Council, of the Houſes Love to the City, and Reſolution to live and die in their defence. City.

In the North the Parliament's Forces prevail again; Sir Hugh Cholmley defeats ſome of the Enemies at Malton, and Jan. 16. he and Sir Matthew Bointon at Gisborough rout a Party of 600, killed many, took 15 Priſoners, whereof their Commander Slingsby was one, and 200 Arms. Sir Hugh Cholmley.

Sir Thomas Fairfax carries Leeds, and took there four Colours, 500 Priſoners, with much Arms and Ammunition; then Wakefield, and Doncaſter yield themſelves to the Parliament.

The Earl of Newcaſtle draws down his Forces towards York, to prepare for the Queen's Entertainment, and proclaims the Lord Fairfax, and Sir Thomas Fairfax his Son, Traitors, and the Parliament did the like for the Earl.

This Lord Fairfax was my Kinſman, and my very noble and kind Friend, he himſelf would ſay that his Name and mine were all one, his was French and mine was Saxon, that Fairfax in French was Whitlocke, or fair Hair; he was a Gentleman of a noble Family, deſcended from the Law, of a generous and couragious Spirit, yet meek and civil, and not given to inſulting.

In all the great Tranſactions of the Time I would never appear to be intirely of any Faction, or Party, but followed the Dictates of my own Reaſon and Conſcience, and upon all Overtures for Peace I induſtriouſly laboured to promote them.

The Parliament reſolved to ſend ſome Propoſitions to the King, and named their Commiſſioners, two of the Houſe of Lords, and four of the Houſe Propoſitions for Peace.

Anno 1642. of Commons, to preſent their Propoſitions to His Majeſty.

The Lords were, the Earl of Northumberland, and the Lord Say, the King refuſed to grant a ſafe Conduct for the Lord Say, becauſe he had been proclaimed by him to be a Traitor; ſo another was put in, and four Lords and eight Commoners named, to carry the Propoſitions to the King: and January 28. the King granted his ſafe Conduct for them to come to him, which was in this Form:

CHARLES REX,

Safe Conduct. Our will and pleaſure is, and we do hereby ſtraightly charge, and command all the Officers and Soldiers of our preſent Army, and all our Miniſters and Subjects whatſoever, to permit and ſuffer our right Truſty, and right well beloved Couſins and Counſellors, Algernoon Earl of Northumberland, Philip Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, William Earl of Salisbury, and Henry Earl of Holland: Our right truſty and right well beloved Thomas Viſcount Weenman, and Richard Viſcount Dungarnon, and our truſty and well beloved Sir John Holland, and Sir William Litton, Knights; William Pierpoint, Bulſtrode Whitelock, Edmund Waller, and Richard Winwood, Eſquires; together with their Servants, to paſs and repaſs to and from us, they being ſent to tender us Propoſitions from our two Houſes of Parliament. This our ſafe Conduct under our Sign Manual and Privy Signet, we charge and command them, and every of them, punctually to obſerve and obey as they will anſwer the contrary at their utmoſt perils. Given at our Court at Oxford, the 28 day of January 1642.

I upon all Overtures for Peace induſtriouſly labour'd to promote them, and that might be ſome ground of my being ſo often imploy'd by the Parliament in their Treaties.

After this ſafe Conduct ſent from the King, the Parliament Commiſſioners took their Journey to Oxford, the Commiſſioners were admitted by the Lords, two with each Lord in their Coaches, which were with ſix gallant Horſes in every Coach, and a great number of their Servants on Horſeback to attend them.

In this Equipage we came to Oxford, where the Governour aſſigned us our Quarters.

Some of the Soldiers, and of the Raſcality of the Town, and others of better Rank tho' of like quality, as we paſs'd by, reviled us with the Names of Traitors and Rebels, but we took no notice of them, only we acquainted ſome of the King's Officers therewith, who ſeem'd to be very angry at it.

Treaty at Oxford. We had our firſt acceſs to the King in the Garden of Chriſt Church, where he was walking with the Prince, and divers of the Lords attending him. All of us kiſſed his hand, not as we were ranked in the ſafe Conduct, but according to our ſeveral degrees. Mr. Pierpoint before the Knights, he being an Earl's Son, and Mr. Winwood before me, he being the eldeſt Knight's Son; and Mr. Waller was the laſt. The King ſaid to him though you are the laſt, yet you are not the worſt, nor the leaſt in my favour.

The diſcovery of a Plot then in hand in London, to betray the Parliament, wherein Mr. Waller was engaged with Challoner, Tomkins, and others, which was then in agitation, did manifeſt the King's Courtſhip to Mr. Waller to be for that Service.

After we had all kiſſed the King's Hand, the Prince gave us his Hand to kiſs.

The Earl of Northumberland read the Propoſitions to the King with a ſober, and ſtout carriage, and being interrupted by the King, he ſaid ſmartly, Your Majeſty will give me leave to proceed? the King anſwered, I, I, and ſo the Earl read them all through. Car. 18.

The Heads of the Parliament's Propoſitions to the King, were To disband his Army, and return to his Parliament, leave Delinquents to Trial, and Papiſts to be diſarmed. Propoſitions.

To paſs a Bill for aboliſhing Biſhops, &c. and ſuch other Bills as ſhould be preſented for Reformation, Recuſants to abjure Papacy, to remove malignant Counſellors, to ſettle the Militia, as the Parliament deſired, to prefer to Offices ſuch as the Parliament ſhould name, to take in all that were put out of Commiſſions of the Peace.

A Bill to vindicate the Lord Kimbolton, and five Members, to enter into Alliance for the Palatinate, to grant a general Pardon, excepting Newcaſtle, Digby, and others.

To reſtore Parliament Members to their Offices, and to reſtore their loſſes.

On the other ſide the King propoſed, The King's Propoſitions.

That his Revenue, Magazines, Towns, Ships and Forts be reſtored.

That what hath been done contrary to Law, and the King's Right may be recalled.

That all illegal power claimed, or acted by Orders of Parliament, be diſclaimed. As the King will conſent to the execution of all Laws, concerning Popery or Reformation; ſo he deſires a Bill for preſerving the Book of Common Prayer againſt Sectaries, that all perſons excepted againſt in the Treaty, may be tried per pares, with a ceſſation of Arms, and for a free Trade.

Thus way was made for a Treaty, but nothing further done in it, till 4 Martii after.

The Queen landed with Officers, Money and Ammunition in the North, and is conveyed to York, where ſhe forms an Army.

Maſſey attempting to ſtorm Sudely Caſtle, was beaten off, he poſſeſſeth the Garden, fires much Hay and Straw, and under the ſmoke thereof planted his Ordnance ſo advantageouſly againſt it, that the beſieged rendred it upon quarter, leaving their Arms behind. Maſſey.

A few days after, Prince Rupert with 4000 Horſe and Foot, marcheth by it to Cirenceſter; where the Magazine of the County lay, this he took, putting the Earl of Stamford's Regiment, and many others to the ſword: took 1100 Priſoners, and 3000 Arms.

Theſe Priſoners were led in much triumph to Oxford, where the King, and Lords looked on them, and too many ſmiled at their miſery, being tied together with cords almoſt naked, beaten, and driven along like Dogs.

Among them was a proper handſome man of a very white Skin, where it could be ſeen for the blood of his wounds, he not being able to go, was ſet naked upon the bare back of an Horſe, his wounds gaping, and his Body ſmeared with blood; yet he ſat upright upon the Horſe, with an undaunted countenance, and when near the King a brawling woman cried out to him, Ah you traiterly Rogue, you are well enough ſerved, he, with a ſcornful look towards her, anſwered, you baſe Whore: and inſtantly dropped off dead from his Horſe.

Anno 1642. And the beginning of ſuch cruelty by Engliſhmen towards their Countreymen, was afterwards too too much followed.

Prince Rupert ſummons Glouceſter, which Maſſey reſolves to hold out; and the better to ſtrengthen himſelf, deſerts Sudely, and other Out-Garriſons.

The Welſh Army under the Earl of Worceſter, and the Lord Herbert his Son, having beaten Colonel Burroughs's Regiment, ſit down before Glouceſter, which they ſummoned, but Maſſey returned a ſcornful Anſwer: Colonel Fines came to him with 200 Horſe, and Dragoons; and not long after, Sir William Waller with his Forces. The Welſh were routed, and the Earl after five weeks ſiege, without any memorable Action departed.

Scots come in. The Scots paſs over the Tyne with a compleat Army into England, to aſſiſt the Parliament. Their General was Leſley, who had been an old Commander in the ſervice of the Swedes, where he had great and deſerved Reputation. He was a perſon of great worth and honour, not ſo good a Clerk as a Soldier.

Leſley.

Ireland. The Pope ſent into Ireland to encourage the Rebels there, beſtows upon them his fatherly Benediction, and plenary Abſolution.

The Germans received ſeveral defeats from the Swedes in Germany, and from the French; and this year died the famous Politician Cardinal Richlieu, and not long after him, his Maſter Lewis the XIII King of France died in the midſt of his Catalonian Conqueſts, leaving his Son Lewis the XIV under the tuition and government of his Mother the Queen Dowager, and of Cardinal Mazarin, Richlieu's Succeſſor.

Richlieu dies.

Anno 1643.

19 Car. The Nineteenth year of King Charles, 1643. begins with a Treaty of Peace between Him and the Parliament, who had named for their Commiſſioners two Lords, the Earl of Northumberland, and the Lord Say, and four Commons, Mr. Pierpoint, Sir William Ermyn, Sir John Holland and myſelf.

The King excepted againſt the Lord Say, as before is mentioned, therefore he did not go, but the other 5 Commiſſioners. The Earl of Northumberland carried with him, his own Plate, and Houſholdſtuff, and Accommodations even to Wine, and Proviſions, which were brought from London to us to Oxford, where we lived in as much Height and Nobleneſs as the Earl of Northumberland uſed to do, and that is ſcarce exceeded by any Subject.

Commiſſioners at Oxford.

The King uſed us with great favour and civility: and his General, Ruthen, and divers of his Lords and Officers, came frequently to our Table; and we had very friendly diſcourſes, and treatments together. The King himſelf did us the honour ſometimes to accept of part of our Wine, and Proviſions, which the Earl ſent to him, when we had any thing extraordinary.

The Commiſſioners finding my Pen uſeful in the ſervice, put me upon drawing of all their Papers to the King, which were tranſcribed afterwards by our Secretaries.

Our Inſtructions were very ſtrict, and tied us up to treat with none but the King himſelf, whom we often attended at his Lodgings in Chriſt-Church, and had acceſs at all times when we deſired it; and were allowed by His Majeſty a very free debate with him.

He had commonly waiting on him when he treated with us, Prince Rupert, the Lord Keeper Littleton, the Earl of Southampton, the Lord Chief Juſtice Banks, and ſeveral Lords of his Council, who never debated any Matters with us, but gave their Opinions to the King in thoſe things which he demanded of them, and ſometimes would put the King in mind of ſome particular things, but otherwiſe they did not ſpeak at all. 19 Car.

We deſired Leave of the King to viſit ſome Officers of the Parliament's Army, who were taken, and then lay Priſoners in the Caſtle, Captain Wingate, Captain Auſtin and others.

The King ordered Smith the Marſhal to bring us to the Priſoners, and to be preſent whilſt we ſpake with them, which the Marſhal did accordingly, and the Priſoners took it kindly, and as a remembrance of them by the Parliament that we came to viſit them.

But we being ſeen with the Marſhal going to the Caſtle, it was reported about the Town, that the Treaty with the Parliament was broken off, and the Commiſſioners had ſo offended the King, that he had ſent two of them Sir John Holland, and Mr. Whitlocke to the Caſtle, and that they were ſeen in the Marſhal's Cuſtody.

In this Treaty the King manifeſted his great Parts and Abilities, ſtrength of Reaſon, and quickneſs of Apprehenſion, with much patience in hearing what was objected againſt him; wherein he allowed all freedom, and would himſelf ſum up the Arguments, and give a moſt clear Judgment upon them.

His unhappineſs was, that he had a better Opinion of others Judgments than of his own, though they were weaker than his own; and of this, we had experience to our great trouble.

We were often waiting on the King, and debating ſome points of the Treaty with him, untill Midnight, before we could come to a concluſion. Upon one of the moſt material points we preſſed His Majeſty with our Reaſons and beſt Arguments we could uſe to grant what we deſired.

The King ſaid, he was fully ſatisfied, and promiſed to give us his Anſwer in writing, according to our deſire, but, becauſe it was then paſt Midnight, and too late to put it into writing, he would have it drawn up the next Morning (when he commanded us to wait on him again) and then he would give us his Anſwer in writing, as it was now agreed upon.

We went to our Lodgings full of joyful hopes to receive this Anſwer the next morning, and which being given, would have much conduced to a happy iſſue, and ſucceſs of this Treaty, and we had the King's word for it, and we waited on him the next morning at the hour appointed.

But inſtead of that Anſwer, which we expected, and were promiſed, the King gave us a Paper quite contrary to what was concluded the Night before, and very much tending to the breach of the Treaty. We did humbly expoſtulate this with His Majeſty, and preſſed him upon his Royal word, and the ill Conſequences which we feared would follow upon this his new Paper.

But the King told us he had altered his mind, and that this Paper which he now gave us, was his Anſwer, which he was now reſolved to make upon our laſt Debate. And we could obtain no other from him, which occaſioned much ſadneſs and trouble to us.

Some of his own Friends, of whom we enquired touching this paſſage, informed us that after we were gone from the King, and that his

Council

Anno 1643. Council were alſo gone away, ſome of his Bed-Chamber (and they went higher) hearing from him, what Anſwer he had promiſed us, and doubting that it would tend to ſuch an Iſſue of the Treaty as they did not wiſh; they being rather for the continuance of the War, never left preſſing, and perſuading of the King, till they prevailed with him to change his former Reſolutions, and to give order for his Anſwer to be drawn, as it was delivered to us.

The Treaty upon the King's Propoſitions, as well as upon ours going ſlowly on, and our Inſtructions being ſtrict, and ſuch as we could not ſhew to the King when he deſired it, he thought fit, Apr. 12. to ſend a Meſſage to the Parliament during the Treaty, to this effect.

Meſſage. That as ſoon as he was ſatisfied in his firſt Propoſition, and as ſoon as the Members of both Houſes ſhould be reſtored, and that his Majeſty and both Houſes may be ſecured from tumultuous Aſſemblies, (which he conceived could not otherwiſe be done, but by adjourning the Parliament to ſome Place twenty Miles from London, ſuch as the Houſes ſhould agree upon) his Majeſty would conſent to the diſbanding of the Armies, and would return ſpeedily to his Parliament.

This being intimated to us, we diſſuaded the ſending of it, as that which we feared might break off the Treaty, and the Improbability that the Houſes would adjourn and leave the City of London, their beſt Friends, and Strength, and put a Diſcontent upon them.

Yet the King was prevailed with to ſend it, and upon the Receipt of it by the Houſes, they preſently reſolved to call away their Commiſſioners, and ſent their Orders to us to return to the Parliament, which we obeyed; and ſo this Treaty having continued from the 4th of March to the 15th of April, was now diſſolved, and all our Labours and Hazards become fruitleſs, and of no effect; and all good Engliſhmen, Lovers of the Peace of their Country, were troubled and diſappointed.

Treaty breaks off.

The Earl of Northumberland demeaned himſelf with much Courage and Wiſdom, and was full of Civility to the other Commiſſioners, and the Port we lived in at Oxford, by the Earl's direction, and managed by his Officers, was full of State and Nobleneſs.

Mr. Pierpoint acted his Part with deep Foreſight and Prudence, and was exceeding courteous to his fellow Commiſſioners.

Sir William Ermyn was a Gentleman of good Underſtanding and Converſation, and would give his Opinion upon good Reaſon.

Sir John Holland, a Gentleman of excellent Parts, as well as Perſon, ſhewed a very good Judgment, and Teſtimony of his Abilities.

I was put upon very much Labour, and had both from the Earl, and the reſt of the Commiſſioners, a great ſhare of Favour and Reſpect.

When we were come to the Parliament we gave them a particular Account of all our Negotiation, wherewith they were ſo well ſatisfy'd, that they order'd the Thanks of the Houſe to be given us, and by Vote approved of all our Proceedings.

Lord Brooke. The Lord Brooke having ſeized the King's Ammunition at Northampton, marched from thence to Warwick, and ſo to Stratford upon Avon, where he beat out of the Town the Forces of Colonel Crocker, and Wagſtaffe, and coming to Litchfield, the Earl of Cheſterfield, and his Forces left the Town, and betook themſelves to the Cloſe. But in the Fight, one of his Men ſhooting at the Window of the Lord Brook's Chamber where his Lordſhip was, the Bullet pierced his Eye, and my Lord inſtantly died. Car. 19.

At which Brook's Soldiers inraged, recollected themſelves, renewed the Fight, and took the Cloſe, with the Earl, and all his Soldiers and Ordnance.

Shortly after the Earl of Northampton with part of the King's Army, enters Litchfield, and drives the Parliament's Forces into the Cloſe; and Sir John Gell, and Sir William Brereton, coming with 3000 Horſe and Foot to relieve them, were fought with and defeated; but the Earl was ſlain in the head of his Forces. E. Northampton.

Afterwards Prince Rupert fell upon the Parliament's Forces there under Colonel Ruſſel, who rendred the Place upon honourable Conditions.

April 17. General Eſſex ſat down before Reading, where he made two Attempts, and was beaten off.

The King marched from Oxford to Wallingford, to relieve Reading, and Eſſex's Forces increaſing, they worſted and killed many of the King's Party at Caveſham, and they furiouſly playing upon the Town, Fielding the Lieutenant Governor (Sir Arthur Aſton being hurt with the Fall of a Brick) ſurrendred the Town to Eſſex.

Fielding for this was ſentenced by a Council of War to loſe his Head, but was afterwards pardoned.

May 3. Cheapſide Croſs, and other Croſſes were voted down. The Queen was voted a Traitor for raiſing Arms againſt the Parliament. She met the King at Edge-hill with 3000 Foot, 30 Companies of Horſe and Dragoons, 6 Pieces of Cannon, &c.

Monſieur Harcourt came Ambaſſadour from France, to mediate an Accommodation, but effected nothing. The King drew to his Aſſiſtance the Iriſh, and the Parliament brought in the Scots, to whom they ſwore the Solemn League and Covenant, for the Preſervation and Reformation of the Proteſtant Religion, and Extirpation of Popery and Prelacy, with all Superſtitions, Hereſies and Prophaneneſs. Covenant.

This was long debated in the Houſe of Commons whether the Members of Parliament ſhould take it or not, and carry'd in the Affirmative; and thoſe looked upon as ill affected, who were backward to take it: And after that, upon a new and great Debate, it was order'd to be taken by all Perſons in the City and Country; and thoſe who were known to refuſe it, were branded with the Mark of Malignancy.

Sir Ralph Hopton at Launceſton drove back Chidley and his Forces, but by a panick Fear, in a tempeſtuous Night, they fled back to Launceſton: Yet ſhortly after they defeated the Parliament Forces. Chidley revolts to the King, and defeated the Coniſh.

May 27. The Parliament Forces gained a Victory at Wakefield againſt the King's Forces.

Colonel Nathaniel Fiennes diſcover'd a Plot of Yeoman's, and others, to betray Briſtol to the King, for which they were ſentenced by a Council of War to be hanged, and though the King wrote to the Magiſtrates, and General Ruthen to Colonel Fiennes the Governor, to ſpare their Lives, yet they were executed.

In the end of this Month of May died Mr. John Pym, that eminent active Member of the Houſe of Commons, and it was believed that the Multitude of his Buſineſs and Cares did ſo break his Spirits and Health, that it brought his Death. Pym dies.

June

Anno 1643. June began with the Arraignment of Waller (a Member of the Houſe of Commons) Tomkins, Challoner, and others, for conſpiring to ſurprize the City Militia, and ſome Members of Parliament, and to let in the King's Forces to ſurprize the City, and diſſolve the Parliament.

Waller, a very ingenious Man, was the principal Actor and Contriver of this Plot, which was in deſign when he and the other Commiſſioners were at Oxford with the Parliament's Propoſitions. And that, being then known to the King, occaſioned him to ſpeak the words to Waller when he kiſſed his Hand, (though you are the laſt, yet you are not the worſt, nor the leaſt in our favour) as is before remembred.

When he was examined touching this Plot, he was asked whether Selden, Pierpoint, Whitlocke, and others by name, were acquainted with it: he anſwer'd, that they were not, but that he did come one Evening to Selden's Study, where Pierpoint and Whitlocke then were with Selden, on purpoſe to impart it to them all, and ſpeaking of ſuch a thing in general Terms, thoſe Gentlemen did ſo inveigh againſt any ſuch thing, as Treachery and Baſeneſs, and that which might be the occaſion of ſhedding much Blood.

That (he ſaid) he durſt not for the Awe and Reſpect which he had for Selden and the reſt, communicate any of the Particulars to them; but was almoſt diſheartned himſelf to proceed in it.

Waller. They were all upon their Trial condemned, Tomkins and Challoner only were hanged, Waller had a Reprieve from General Eſſex, and after a year's Impriſonment, he paid a Fine of ten thouſand pounds, was pardon'd, and travailed into France.

The General Eſſex being about Thame, order'd the Buckinghamſhire Forces to alarm the Cavaliers, ſome Skirmiſhes paſt between them, Rupert engageth their Body in Chalgrave Field, routs them, and takes Captain Sheffeild, and many other Priſoners, Major Gunter was ſhot dead in the place, Hampden. and Hampden wounded, whereof he died a Week after.

Some had adviſed him not to go forth upon this Party, he not being order'd to do it; but his Mettle did put him forward, and his Death enſued.

He was a Gentleman of the ancienteſt Extraction in Buckinghamſhire, Hampden of Hampden, his Fortune large, his natural Abilities great; and his Affection to publick Liberty and Applauſe in his Country, expoſed him to many Difficulties and Troubles, as in the Buſineſs of the Ship-money, of the Loan, and now in Parliament, where he was a moſt active and leading Member; he ſpake rationally and ſubtilly, and often propoſed Doubts more than he reſolved; he was well beloved in his Country, where he had a great Intereſt, as alſo in the Houſe of Commons, he died lamented, about the 24th of June, 1643.

In the Weſt the Parliament Forces took in Taunton and Bridgwater. The Synod of Divines ſat, but concluded upon nothing.

Germany. In Germany the Proteſtant Forces under the Duke of Brunſwick endeavour'd to reduce Woolfenbuttel. Picolomini for the Emperor, enters the Town, and ſets upon Brunſwick, but was beaten, and loſt 2000 Men.

Lamboy for the Emperor about Bohemia, had his Regiment defeated for want of good Guards, and himſelf taken Priſoner, and ſent to France by Count Guebiran, who for this Service and taking of John de Wert, received the Marſhal's Staff.

Swedes. The Swedes with 7000 freſh Men, under Tortoiſon, enter Germany, and did gallant Service againſt the Arch-Duke Leopold. Picolomini marcheth againſt, and brake through their left Wing at Leipſick, and fell to plunder. The Swedes rally and turn upon the Enemy, and they fly; ſix thouſand of them ſeized never ſhot off. Car. 19.

The Swedes take Leipſick and beſiege Friburgh, Swedes. which is relieved by Picolomini, who upon this Succeſs took leave of the Arch-Duke, and the Emperor's Service, and was entertained by the Spaniard.

The French proſpered in Catalonia.

June 16. The Queen was brought to bed of a Henrietta Maria. Daughter at Exeter, named Henrietta Maria.

The Parliament finding the great failure of Juſtice for want of a great Seal, voted, That if the Lord Keeper Littleton did not return with the Great Seal within fourteen days, he ſhould loſe his Place, and whatſoever ſhould be ſealed with that great Seal afterwards, ſhould be void. Great Seal.

By their Order a new Great Seal was made, engraven on the one ſide, the Picture of the Houſe of Commons, the Members ſitting; on the other ſide, the Arms of England and Ireland.

Waller with his whole Army was fought with by Greenville and Slanning, at Landſdowne in the Weſt, Greenville did gallant Service, and was ſlain there; ſo was Leake, the Lord Deincourt's Son, with the Enemies Colours about his Arm, and many others of Quality. Sir Will. Waller defeated.

On Waller's part, the Foot were diſperſed and cut off, many Officers and Arms loſt. Waller follows the King's Forces to whom Wilmot was ſent with fifteen hundred Horſe; they both met at Rowndway Down, near the Deviſes in Wiltſhire, where Waller's Horſe upon a panick Fear, fled and left their Foot to the Mercy of the Enemy, who ſlew a great number of them, and took many Priſoners, four Braſs Guns, Ammunition and Baggage.

This cauſed a Diminution of the former Fame of Waller, which was raiſed up near to a Competition or Emulation with Eſſex himſelf, and cauſed ſome ſlackning of mutual Succours and Aſſiſtance, to the Prejudice of their common Cauſe: But after this Defeat, Waller poſted up to London, where his Perſon, being a Man known to be of much Honour and Courage, ſilenced Invectives againſt him, and made the better way for Recruits for him.

During theſe Actions of Waller, their General Eſſex writes to the Parliament, to incline them to a Peace with the King; at which ſome were diſpleaſed, and intimated the promoting of Waller in his place: But this was before they received the News from Rowndway Down of his Defeat.

In the North ſome Difference had been between the Lord Fairfax and Sir John Hotham, who re- Hotham. fuſed to ſubmit to Fairfax, though General for the Parliament in thoſe Parts; but Hotham was as high and moroſe, as the other was meek and courteous. The Parliament hearing of this Conteſt, intended to diſplace Hotham, which he diſcovering by Letters that he intercepted, began to have new Deſigns.

His Son Captain Hotham being ſuſpected by the Parliament, was impriſoned at Nottingham, from whence eſcaping, he under-hand treated with the Earl of Newcaſtle, and coming to Hull, he and his Father ſtood upon their Guard.

The Parliament doubting the Conſequence hereof, ſent Sir Matthew Bointon with a Commiſſion to ſeize them both, and to be Governor there; who not ſuſpected by Hotham, being his Brother-in-Law, had the more opportunity to tamper with Anno 1643. with the Garriſon, and gain an Intereſt with the Soldiers, ſo that he gained them and the Magazine.

Then Sir John, too late ſeeing the Deſign againſt him, fled to Beverley, where his own Soldiers ſet upon him, and forced him back again to Hull, where he was taken by his Brother Sir Matthew Bointon; and with his Lady, his Son, and all his Children, ſent up Priſoners to the Parliament, and Bointon remained Governor of Hull in his place.

This unfortunate Gentleman had a good Eſtate and Intereſt, and was of a fair Extraction in his Country, yet his rough Carriage, eſpecially to his Inferiors, his very narrow Living, and the betraying of the Truſt committed to him, render'd him ſo diſtaſteful to all ſorts of People, that his Maſters (for whom he had done ſo great Service in reſiſting the King at his firſt coming to Hull,) they now caſt him off; his Soldiers (who had fought for him) now chaſe him away from them, and his Brother-in-Law ſupplants him, and ſends him with his Wife and Children Priſoners to the Parliament. The Exit of his Scene in this Tragick Age, follows in its order of time.

Briſtol taken by Prince Rupert. Prince Rupert hover'd long about Briſtol, till finding by his Correſpondents (whereof he had many in the City) when it was worſt provided for Reſiſtance, he fell upon it, and Colonel Nathaniel Fiennes the Governor, after three days Siege, was forced to ſurrender it.

For which the Governor was afterwards ſentenced by a Council of War, to loſe his Life, but by General Eſſex he was pardoned, and gave off his Military Service.

Great Seal. The new Great Seal was at the firſt committed to the Cuſtody of the two Speakers, to be made uſe of by the Warrant of the Houſes, afterwards it was committed to the Cuſtody of two Lords, and four Commoners, as Commiſſioners, who had the Authority of Keeper of the Great Seal.

The Lords were the Earls of Mancheſter and Bullingbrook; the Commoners were Mr. Brown, Mr. St. John, Mr. Wilde, and Mr. Prideaux.

The Courts of Juſtice were not yet open, no Practice for Lawyers.

Auguſt 12. The Earl of Lindſey being releaſed from his Impriſonment by the Parliament, came to the King at Oxford, and was highly welcomed there; but the Earls of Holland and Bedford found it otherwiſe to them.

For they about Auguſt 25, upon ſome Diſtaſte at the Parliament, left them and got to Wallingford, where the Governor Blagge received them with great Shews of Honour, and brought them from thence to the King at Oxford.

To him theſe Lords profeſſed their Duty and Allegiance, acknowledging their former Errors, and promiſing wholly to deſert the Parliament, and to adhere to his Majeſty's Intereſt. But not long after, finding leſs Favour and Reſpect to them from the King and his Party, than they expected; upon this new Diſcontent, they found means again to quit Oxford, and to return to the Parliament.

About the ſame time the Earl of Clare left the Parliament, and went to the King to Oxford; but finding ſuch Entertainment as Holland and Bedford had done, both from the King and thoſe about him, he ſtoutly told the King, That he intended to return to his own Houſe in Nottinghamſhire, and prayed his Majeſty's Leave for it. The King wiſhed him not to go, but finding him reſolute upon his Journey, ſent to have him ſtopped; but in the mean while the Earl found means to paſs the Guards, and got home to Houghton, and from thence to the Parliament. Car. 19.

It was ſaid in Drollery, that theſe three Earls had much confirmed others to continue with the Parliament; for they having tried both Parties, found it by Experience that this was the beſt to be in, and to adhere unto.

A Book ſet out by Saltmarſh a Miniſter, gave Diſtaſte to ſober Men, by theſe, among other his Counſells:

1. That all means ſhould be uſed to keep the King and his People from a ſudden Union.

2. To cheriſh the War under the notion of Popery, as the ſureſt means to engage the People.

3. If the King would not grant their Demands, then to root him out, and the Royal Line, and to collate the Crown upon ſome body elſe.

Some excepting againſt this in the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Henry Martyn ſaid, He ſaw no reaſon to condemn Mr. Saltmarſh, and that it were better one Family ſhould be deſtroyed than many. H. Martyn.

Sir Nevil Poole moved that Mr. Martyn might explain what one Family he meant. Who boldly anſwer'd, The King and his Children. Upon this ſome of the Members urged againſt his lewdneſs of Life, and the height and danger of theſe Words: And divers ſpeaking ſharply againſt Mr. Martyn, he was committed to the Tower, but ſhortly after releaſed, and re-admitted to his place in Parliament.

Sir Edward Coniers is removed from his place of Lieutenant of the Tower, and the Charge thereof given to the Lord Mayor Pennington. The Parliament's Commiſſioners in Scotland ſend word of a fair Correſpondence with the State there, and their readineſs to comply with the Parliament; in order to which, they had ſent from them the Form of a Covenant to be taken by both Nations.

This the Parliament refers to the Aſſembly of Divines then ſitting, for their Advice in it. Sir John Evelyn of Wilts, had writ a Letter from the Earl of Northumberland's Houſe at Petworth, to Sir John Evelyn of Surrey, which being intercepted, and ſuſpicious; both of them being Members of the Houſe of Commons were impriſoned.

Both Houſes paſſed an Ordinance, Auguſt 28, for demoliſhing and removing all Monuments of Idolatry and Superſtition out of all Churches and Chapels in England and Wales.

Divers Members of both Houſes, whereof I was one, were Members of the Aſſembly of Divines, and had the ſame Liberty with the Divines to ſit and debate, and give their Votes in any Matter which was in conſideration amongſt them: In which Debates Mr. Selden ſpake admirably, and confuted divers of them in their own Learning. Selden.

And ſometimes when they had cited a Text of Scripture to prove their Aſſertion, he would tell them, Perhaps in your little Pocket Bibles with gilt Leaves (which they would often pull out and read) the Tranſlation may be thus, but the Greek or the Hebrew, ſignifies thus and thus; and ſo would totally ſilence them.

The Lord Willoughby of Parham had done very conſiderable Service for the Parliament in Lincolnſhire, and manifeſted as much Courage and Gallantry as any Man in their Service. He had taken in Gainsborough, and divers Priſoners there, among whom was the Earl of Kingſton, who with the reſt being ſent by Water in a cloſe Boat towards Hull. Earl of Kingſton.

Anno 1643. A party of Cavaliers, as they paſſed by, called to the Boat to ſtay, and becauſe they did not, the Cavaliers ſhot at them, and the Earl with his Man, and no other in the Boat, were ſlain by their own Friends.

The Lord Willoughby kept the Town afterwards againſt the Earl of Newcaſtle's Forces, till overpowered with Numbers, he was forced to ſurrender it upon honourable Conditions.

Cromwell. Colonel Cromwell gave aſſiſtance to the Lord Willoughby, and performed very gallant Service againſt the Earl of Newcaſtle's Forces. This was the beginning of his great Fortunes, and now he began to appear to the World.

He had a brave Regiment of Horſe of his Country-men, moſt of them Freeholders, and Freeholders Sons, and who upon matter of Conſcience, engaged in this Quarrel, and under Cromwell.

And thus being well armed within, by the ſatisfaction of their own Conſciences, and without, by good Iron Arms, they would as one Man, ſtand firmly, and charge deſperately.

The Parliament ordered Recruits for the Lord Willoughby, and for Cromwell; and both of them became in the Parliament's favour.

Glouceſter. Glouceſter was the general ſubject of diſcourſe; the King was ſet down before it with his whole Army, the Governor Maſſey, not only refuſeth upon his Majeſty's Summons, to render the City to him, but ſallies forth upon ſome of their Quarters, and did cut off 300 of their Men.

Maſſey.

A Conſpiracy of the Mace-bearer, and others to kill the Governor, and chief Military Officers, was diſcovered, and the betraying of the Town prevented; ſome of the Conſpirators being executed.

General Eſſex, advanced with his whole Body from Ailesbury towards Glouceſter, Aug. 29. The Enemy made a Breach in the Outworks, and ſome Aſſaults, but was gallantly repulſed. The King drew his Forces from Exeter and the Weſt, to the Siege of Glouceſter; yet the Beſiegers were very doubtful whether to continue, or raiſe the Siege.

Warwick Caſtle held out againſt the King's Forces, and Colonel Bridges the Governor acquitted himſelf with much honour. The Earl of Denbigh was made Major General of Coventry, and ſome part adjacent.

The Lord Gray and Colonel Harvey with their Parties, and many Volunteers joined with General Eſſex, in his advance for the relief of Glouceſter. At Plymouth Mr. Alexander Carew a Member of Parliament, and Governor of the Iſland there, had a deſign to betray the Town and Iſland to the King.

But his own Soldiers diſcovering it ſeized upon their Governor, to ſend him up to the Parliament; and the Women were ſo enraged againſt him for his perfidiouſneſs, that it was difficult to reſcue him from their execution.

Members diſabled. The Houſe by Vote diſabled him from being a Member; and the like they did for Sir John Harriſon, Sir Henry Anderſon, and Mr. Conſtantine, of whom they were informed, that he deſigned to betray Poole into the King's hands.

And theſe, and divers other Members of the Houſe being diſabled, and the new Great Seal finiſhed, they ordered that new Writs ſhould be iſſued forth to the ſeveral Places for which they ſerved, to chooſe new Members in their room.

Sir Edward Bainton another Member, who deſerted the Parliament, and went to the Iſle of Wight, where he ſpake opprobrious Words againſt them, was put in priſon.

The Town of Lyn in Norfolk, declaring for the King, the Earl of Mancheſter with three thouſand Horſe, and fifteen hundred Foot, draws to them, and blocks up the Paſſages to them by Land: the Earl of Warwick did the like by Sea. 19 Car.

General Eſſex made the ſlower marches towards Glouceſter, being forced to keep his Army together in a continual poſture of Defence, for he was daily skirmiſhed with by the Lord Wilmot, who attended all his removes with a Body of two thouſand and five hundred Horſe.

His Majeſty underſtanding that Eſſex advanced apace towards the relief of Glouceſter, ſent to him a Trumpet, with ſome Propoſitions to be treated on.

But Eſſex too much acquainted with ſuch ſmall deſigns to hinder his March, returned a ſpeedy Anſwer, That he had no Commiſſion to treat, but to relieve Glouceſter, which he was reſolved to do, or to loſe his Life there. And his Soldiers hearing of a Trumpeter, come with Propoſitions to treat, they cried out for a long time together with loud Acclamations, No Propoſitions, no Propoſitions: And ſo the Trumpeter was diſmiſſed. Gen. Eſſex.

The Ordinances for the Covenant, and for the Exciſe, were at a Conference delivered to the Lords, as having paſt the Houſe of Commons; the Covenant was read to the Lords, with the Explanation upon it, and the Fifth Article touching the Pacification omitted, and Ireland added. Covenant.

The Ordinance for the Exciſe with ſome Amendments of the former was read to the Lords, and their Concurrence to both deſired, which was given by them the next Morning.

Sir John Hotham and his Son were examined in the Houſe touching their Treaſons, and committed to the Tower.

Sir William Brereton took Eccleſhal Caſtle, and defeated a Party of the Lord Capel's Forces, under Colonel Haſtings. Two of the City Regiments were ordered to march out, and join with Sir William Waller: The Major General of his Army, was Colonel Potley, an old Soldier under the King of Sweden, Guſtavus Adolphus. Col. Potley.

He was of ſuch repute with that Crown, that when he took his leave of them to come for England, the Chancellor Oxenſtierne, by command of the Senators when they all ſat in Council, ſent for this Colonel to come in to them, and told him, that he having been an ancient Servant to that Crown, and who had done gallant Service for them, they held him in the Rank of their Children, and therefore by command of the Senate, he put about the Colonel's Neck a rich Gold Chain, with a Medal of the late King his Maſter, to wear in Memory of him.

He told him that the Senate had ordered two thouſand Dollars to defray his Expences, and four thouſand Dollars to bear his Charges to his own Country, and to keep him ſtill a Servant to that Crown, and that he might eat of their Bread as long as he lived, they had given him a Penſion of two thouſand Dollars per Annum during his Life.

Eſſex proceeded in his march to Glouceſter, and when the Enemy fell upon any of his Companies, (as they often did) Eſſex relieved them, fought with his Enemies, and made his way through them. The King underſtanding his near approach to Glouceſter, and finding his own Soldiers not forward to fight Eſſex, as the King intended, he upon Sunday and Monday, the third and fourth of September, drew off his Carriages, and removed the Siege: and on Tueſday Morning, Glouceſter relieved.

Anno 1643. Septemb. 5, 1643. went over Severn with all his Army, the way to Briſtol. Eſſex came to Glouceſter, Septemb. 6, and ſent four Regiments, who enter'd the Town, and himſelf the next day finding the Siege totally raiſed, he ſent three thouſand Horſe to attend the King's march, and keep his Forces in a body, that they might not plunder the Country, or elſe to fight them.

Upon the coming of the Earl of Newcaſtle towards Beverly, the Lord Fairfax finding the Town not tenable, and the Inhabitants ill affected to the Parliament, drew off all the Carriages and Soldiers from thence to Hull; and Newcaſtle enter'd, and poſſeſſed Beverly.

The Mayors of Barnſtable and of Bidiford in the Weſt, betrayed theſe Towns to the Lord Digby's Forces.

Judge Berkley ſentenced. The Lords ſentenced Judge Berkley to pay twenty thouſand Pounds Fine, and to be diſabled from bearing any Office in the Commonwealth, for his Judgment in the Buſineſs of Ship-money.

The Lord Maitland, Mr. Henderſon, and another Scots Commiſſioner, with Mr. Hatcher, and Mr. Nye, arrived in London; and their Letters of Credence from the States of Scotland, were read to the Lords and Commons, with the readineſs of the Scots to aſſiſt the Parliament.

This Buſineſs was referred to a Committee of both Houſes, to treat with the Scots Commiſſioners, upon their Propoſitions, and at two Meetings all was agreed.

The Lords aſſented to the Covenant with the Alterations made by the Commons, and the Scots Commiſſioners aſſented to them likewiſe.

The King ſent his Proclamation to Scotland, forbidding them to treat any farther with the Parliament of England, or to give them any Aſſiſtance.

Newcaſtle's Forces from Beverly quartered about three Miles diſtance round on the Land's-ſide of Hull, upon whom Sir Thomas Fairfax made a ſally out of Hull, killed many, and took fifty Priſoners.

I was in the Chair of a Committee, to treat with the Merchant Adventurers (with whoſe Buſineſs I was well acquainted) about confirming ſome of their Patents and their Loan of 60000 l. to the Parliament.

The Town of Portſmouth petitioned, that Sir William Waller might be their Governor, and it was left to the General Eſſex to give him a Commiſſion accordingly.

The Speaker acquainted the Houſe with Letters he received from France, That an Army of twenty thouſand was ready at St. Maloes to be ſhipped for Briſtol, to aſſiſt the King.

The News of the King's raiſing the Siege of Glouceſter, occaſioned various Diſcourſes of that Action; all Men both Friends and Enemies agreed, that Eſſex herein performed a very gallant Soldier-like Action: And moſt Men were of Opinion, that when the King went to Glouceſter, if he had marched up to London, he had done his work.

For at that time the Parliament had no conſiderable Body of an Army, and their Party in ſome diviſions: but by the time of the King's March, and Stay at Glouceſter, they had recruited their Army, provided Money, and pieced up their Diſcontents among themſelves.

The City of Exeter having held out three Months Siege for the Parliament, their Powder and Proviſions failing them, ſurrendred to the King's Forces, upon Conditions which were broken by the Enemy, as thoſe at Briſtol were.

Both Houſes ordered Supplies for Glouceſter; Eſſex followed the King, and ſends for Sir William Waller to haſten to him. 19 Car.

At Cirenceſter, Eſſex beat up the King's Quarters, drove Sir Nicholas Criſpe and Colonel Spencer out of the Town, with their two Regiments of Horſe, and took thirty Cart-loads of Victuals, and about 4000 Horſe.

Captain Brooke being diſcovered by his Mariners to have a deſign to betray the Ship which he commanded, to the King; the Seamen clapt their Captain under Deck, and diſcovered his Plot to the Earl of Warwick their Admiral.

Lyn in Norfolk was ſurrendred to the Earl of Mancheſter.

There was a Skirmiſh between the King's, and Eſſex's Horſe near Hungerford in Berkſhire, about eighty on both ſides ſlain; of the King's part, the Marquiſs Delavive: Eſſex ſurprized a Troup of the King's Horſe, and that night quartered at Hungerford; the Marquiſs his Corps was brought into Hungerford, and afterwards ranſomed by the King's Party for 500 pieces.

Sept. 19. Eſſex marched toward Newbury, his Army in great want of Victuals, both for Men and Horſe; to whom the Country thereabouts was ill affected, and would bring in nothing to them without Compulſion.

The whole body of the King's Army had poſſeſſed themſelves of the Town of Newbury, on their right hand they had the advantage of the River, and a hill half a Mile from the Town where they had planted their Ordnance, ſo that there was no paſſage to them, but with great diſadvantage, and by a narrow Lane.

Newbury Fight. Yet Eſſex finding his Soldiers full of mettle, and reſolved to force their way, he in Perſon led them on, firſt charged the Enemy with his own Regiment, and the Lord Roberts's Brigade of Horſe, and begen the Fight about ſix a Clock in the Morning Sept. 20, which continued with very hot Service till ten or eleven a Clock at Night.

The Parliament Forces beat the Enemy from all their advantages, got the Hill from them, purſued them to Newbury; and out of the Town again, but the Night coming on, they no farther could purſue them, and though the King's Forces, (eſpecially the Horſe which conſiſted moſt of Gentlemen) made gallant reſiſtance, yet this Place not being proper for their Fight, their Foot were thus beaten, and in the Night they drew off their Ordnance, and marched away leaving Eſſex Maſter of the Field, who kept it that Night, and part of the next Day.

When Night drew on, the Enemy, both Horſe and Foot, ſtood in good order on the farther ſide of the Green, where they fought, and the Parliament's Forces expected they would have engaged them the next Day, but the King's Forces drew off by Night.

The Parliament Soldiers had the Pillage of the dead Bodies, both Parties performed their Service with great manhood and animoſity, eſpecially the King's Horſe, who yet were worſted, and the Earls of Caernarvan and Sunderland, who commanded part of them, were ſlain in the Fight.

Lord Falkland. The Lord Falkland Secretary of State, in the Morning of the Fight, called for a clean ſhirt, and being asked the reaſon of it, anſwered, that if he were ſlain in the Battle, they ſhould not find his Body in foul Linen.

Being diſſuaded by his Friends to go into the Fight, as having no call to it, and being no Military Officer, he ſaid he was weary of the times, and foreſaw

Anno 1643. foreſaw much Miſery to his own Country, and did believe he ſhould be out of it ere night, and could not be perſuaded to the contrary, but would enter into the Battle, and was their ſlain.

His death was much lamented by all that knew him, or heard of him; being a Gentleman of great Parts, Ingenuity and Honour, courteous and juſt to all, and a paſſionate Promoter of all endeavours of Peace betwixt the King and Parliament. From the time of Eſſex's Remove from Quarters at a Village called Chilton near Hungerford to the end of this Newbury Fight there were of the King's part ſlain above 2000, beſides the three Lords, and divers other Officers of Note.

On the Parliament's part were ſlain about 500, Colonel Tucker, and the Lieutenant Colonel of Eſſex's Regiment, and one Captain more of Horſe, in this Service the London Regiments did their Parts with much Courage and Gallantry.

Eſſex advanced from Newbury towards Reading, to refreſh his Men, and no Enemy appeared till they came to Theale, a Village four Miles from Reading, where a Party of the King's Horſe fired upon the rear of Eſſex's Army as they marched up a Lane near to Theale; and they had a hot Skirmiſh for the time, about ſixty of the King's Horſe were ſlain, and about eight of the Parliament's, the reſt of the King's Party retreated, and the Parliament Forces took up their Quarters at Reading.

The Lords and Commons ſent a Committee to their General at Reading to compliment him, and congratulate his great Succeſſes, and to inform themſelves what Supplies were wanting for the Army, that they might be ſpeedily provided.

They ſent another Committee to acquaint the City with the happy Succeſs of the Army under General Eſſex, and to treat with them about Supplies of Money, Ammunition and other neceſſaries to be forthwith ſent down to the Army.

They alſo took order to ſtop the paſſes between London and Oxford, to prevent the King's Intelligence, and Supplies of Money and Ammunition, whereof they underſtood he was in great want.

Sept. 25. Both Houſes, with the Aſſembly of Divines, and Scots Commiſſioners met in St. Margaret's Church Weſtminſter, where Mr. White, one of the Aſſembly prayed an Hour to prepare Covenant. them for taking the Covenant, then Mr. Nye in the Pulpit made ſome obſervations touching the Covenant, ſhewing the Warrant of it from Scripture, the Examples of it ſince the Creation, and the Benefit to the Church.

Mr. Henderſon one of the Scots Commiſſioners concluded in a Declaration of what the Scots had done, and the good they had received, by ſuch Covenants, and then he ſhewed the prevalency of ill Counſels about the King, the Reſolutions of the States of Scotland to aſſiſt the Parliament of England.

Then Mr. Nye in the Pulpit read the Covenant, and all preſent held up their hands in teſtimony of their Aſſent to it; and afterwards in the ſeveral Houſes ſubſcribed their Names in a Parchment Roll, where the Covenant was written: the Divines of the Aſſembly, and the Scots Commiſſioners likewiſe ſubſcribed the Covenant, and then Doctor Gouge in the Pulpit prayed for a Bleſſing upon it.

The Houſe ordered the Covenant to be taken the next Lord's-day, by all Perſons in their reſpective Pariſhes, and the Miniſters to exhort them to it.

The General with the Lord Gray, Sir Philip Stapleton and others came to London, and the Army removed to Windſor, and thereabouts. Sir William Waller's Forces quartering at Colnebrook, Stanes, and thereabouts. 19 Car.

General Eſſex. The Houſe of Commons with their Speaker went to Eſſex-houſe, to congratulate the General's ſafe Return to them, and his happy Succeſs and Valour in the late Buſineſs at Newbury: And cauſed their acknowledgment thereof, and of their Protection by him under God, to be entered in the Journal Book of the Parliament.

The Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London waited in their Scarlet Gowns upon the General, and highly complimented him, as the Protector and Defender of their Lives and Fortunes, and of their Wives and Children, and the Trained Bands ſent out, as he paſſed by, loud Acclamations of his Praiſe.

In human probability, the King's Army was the more likely to have prevailed, their Horſe more and better than the Parliament's, and their Foot near as good, their Advantages greater, and their Courages higher, and their Confidence too much.

God was pleaſed to raiſe the Courage of the Parliament's Forces, and to give them the Succeſs, and indeed all Succeſs in War, as well as in other matters, is the free gift of the Lord of Hoſts.

Eſſex and his Soldiers acknowledged much gallantry, and Courage in thoſe of the King's Party, and the King's Party acknowledged the like of Eſſex and his Soldiers; all were Engliſhmen, and pity it was that ſuch Courage ſhould be ſpent in the Blood of each other.

A paſſage or two I ſhall here remember of extraordinary Mettle and boldneſs of Spirit. One Sir Philip is of Sir Philip Stapleton (though he would not Stapleton. acknowledge it) that he being with other Parliament Commanders in the Head of a body of Horſe, facing another body of the King's Horſe, before whom ſtood their Commanders, and the chief of them was Prince Rupert.

This Parliament Officer deſiring to cope ſingly with the Prince, rode from before his Company up to the body of Horſe, before whom the Prince with divers other Commanders were, and had his Piſtol in his hand ready cockt and fitted.

Coming up to them alone, he looked one and another of them in the Face, and when he came to Prince Rupert, whom he knew, he fired his Piſtol in the Prince's Face, but his Armour defended him from any hurt, and having done this, he turned his Horſe about, and came gently off again without any hurt, though many Piſtols were fired at him.

Another paſſage was of Sir Philip Stapleton's Groom, a Yorkſhire Man, and ſtout, if not too raſh, by this Story, he was attending on his Maſter in a Charge, where the Groom's Mare was killed under him, but he came off on Foot, back again to his own Company. To ſome of whom he complained that he had forgotten to take off his Saddle and Bridle from his Mare, and to bring them away with him; and ſaid that they were a new Saddle and Bridle, and that the Cavaliers ſhould not get ſo much by him, but he would go again and fetch them: his Maſter and Friends perſuaded him not to adventure in ſo raſh an act, the Mare lying dead cloſe to the Enemy, who would maul him, if he came ſo near them, and his Maſter promiſed to give him another new Saddle and Bridle.

But all this would not perſuade the Groom to leave his Saddle and Bridle to the Cavaliers, but he Anno 1643. he went again to fetch them, and ſtayed to pull off the Saddle and Bridle, whilſt hundreds of Bullets flew about his Ears, and brought them back with him, and had no hurt at all.

The Lord Grey of Groby, Sir Philip Stapleton and divers other Members of the Houſe, and divers Officers of the Army, received the thanks of the Houſe, for their good Service done in the late Glouceſter Journey, and Fight at Newbury, and this to be entred in the Parliament Journals, for an Honour to them, and their Poſterity.

Amongſt the Colours taken at Newbury, one Cornet was the Figure of the Parliament Houſe, with two Traitors Heads ſtanding on the Top of it, and by them, this Word ut extra, ſic infra, but the Parliament nevertheleſs expoſed them to publick View and Cenſure.

The Commons ordered a Declaration upon a Bull from the Pope intercepted, which was to encourage the Roman Catholicks in Ireland to a rigorous Proſecution of the War, for the King againſt the Parliament.

Some Diſcontents had been between the Earl of Eſſex, and Sir William Waller, which upon a Conference with a Committee of both Houſes, and a Letter from Waller to Eſſex, were made up again, and the General, of a good nature, declared himſelf to be fully ſatisfied.

The Commons borrowed 30000 l. of the Merchant Adventurers to ſupply the Navy, and took up other large Sums for ſupply of the Armies.

They paſt a Declaration againſt the Ceſſation of Arms then in Treaty between the King and the Iriſh Rebels, but the ſame was brought to a Concluſion, and many of the Iriſh came in to the King's Service here.

Paſquils. This gave occaſion for many Invectives, and Paſquils, That the Queen's Army of French and Walloon Papiſts, and the King's Army of Engliſh Papiſts, together with the Iriſh Rebels, were to ſettle the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberties of England.

Laud. The Charge againſt Archbiſhop Laud was referred to a Committee, to be drawn up, and preſented to the Commons and the Committee to manage the Evidence at the trial againſt the Archbiſhop.

Of this Committee I was one, and particularly ſummoned to attend that Buſineſs, which I declined, and gave my Reaſons to Mr. Miles Corbett the Chair-man of that Committee, why it was not fit for me to appear in it, againſt one to whom I had been beholden for my Education.

But this would not ſatisfy Mr. Corbett, but ſtill he preſſed me and ſent for me to come, and attend that Committee, but I abſolutely refuſed it.

This ſo diſpleaſed Mr. Corbett, that he acquainted the Houſe with my Neglect, and moved them earneſtly, that I might be required by their Order to attend the Service of that Committee, and to be one of thoſe that ſhould manage the Evidence againſt the Archbiſhop.

This was moved when I was in the Houſe, and upon this Alarm I held it fit for me to make my Apology, and endeavour to be diſcharged from that Employment, by urging that the Archbiſhop did me the Favour to take a ſpecial Care of my Breeding in St. John's College in Oxford, and that it would be diſingenious and ungrateful for me to be perſonally inſtrumental to take away his Life, who was ſo inſtrumental for the bettering of mine.

Upon which the Houſe diſcharged me from this Employment, at which Mr. Corbett had ſome Regret.

Ormond. The Earl of Ormond concluded the Ceſſation of Arms with the Iriſh Rebels, and divers of them under Colonel Ernely came over hither to ſerve the King. 19 Car.

The Earl of Crauford for the King, fought to gain the Town of Poole by Treachery, and dealt with Captain Sydenham one of the Garriſon, who promiſed to do his Work, and received of him 40 l. and a Promiſe of a great Reward and Preferment. Poole.

At an Hour appointed, Crauford comes to the Town with 500 Horſe, and ſome Foot. Sydenham and the Governor, whom he acquainted with it, let in Crauford, and half his Men into the Town, and then letting fall a Chain ſhut out the reſt, few eſcaped of thoſe who entred the Town, but were killed or taken Priſoners.

A Letter from Dr. Featly to Oxford was intercepted, wherein he held Correſpondence with them, and fiſhed for Preferment from them, and the Dr. being a Member of the Aſſembly of the Divines, was for his Infidelity diſcharged of his Attendance on the Aſſembly, and of his two Parſonages. Dr. Featly.

Sir Nicholas Criſpe upon a Quarrel, and Affront offered to him in his own Quarters by Sir James Ennyon, who challenged him alſo to fight, killed Ennyon, but was acquitted for it by the King's Council of War. Sir Nic. Criſpe.

Mr. Walter Mountague was apprehended at Rocheſter, coming up towards London in a Diſguiſe, and Letters of Conſequence taken about him.

The Commons ordered Wood to be cut in the King's Lands, and of Biſhops and Delinquents, near London for ſupply of Fuel for the City. They ordered Copes and Surplices to be taken away out of all Churches.

Monſieur de Creſſey came over Ambaſſador from the French King to the Parliament, and was received with all due Reſpect by a Committee of Lords and Commons at Graveſend, and conducted to the Parliament. French Ambaſſador.

The Commons provided Money for the advance of the Scots Army, from the City of London.

The French Ambaſſador demanded the Enlargement of Mr. Walter Mountague, as one employed hither by the King of France, but it was denied.

The Cavaliers plundered and burnt Part of Wokingham, and quarter near Reading upon deſign to fortify it, and ſummon the Country for that End.

The Parliament made ſome Orders for ſeveral Regiments to march out, and for Money, which was wanting for Eſſex's Army, and for Sir William Waller's Forces, who alſo deſired more Power, than his preſent Commiſſion from Eſſex allowed him.

The Earl of Mancheſter having ſettled Lyn, marched with his Army into Lincolnſhire, where he joined with the Lord Willoughby of Parham, Sir Thomas Fairfax, and Colonel Cromwel's Forces, and all together made up a very conſiderable Army. Mancheſter.

Upon his Deſire the Parliament gave him Power to levy Monies out of the ſequeſtred Eſtates in the aſſociated Counties, towards Payment of his Army. They alſo ſequeſtred the Eſtates of ſuch Members of both Houſes, as had deſerted the Parliament, or were in actual War againſt them.

By Letters intercepted it appeared, that by Authority from the Pope, a new Popiſh Hierarchy by Biſhops, &c. was to be ſet up in all Counties in England, with Letters ſent to Rome about the ſame Matter.

A Miniſter was voted out of his Living, for that he conſtantly pray'd for the Iriſh Rebels by the Name Miniſters.

This Gentleman Colonel Wilſon was the only Son of his wealthy Father, Heir to a large Eſtate of 2000*l. per Annum* in Land, and Partner with his Father in a great perſonal Eſtate imployed in Merchandize; yet in conſcience he held himſelf obliged to undertake this Journey, as perſuaded that the Honour and Service of God, and the flouriſhing of the Goſpel of Chriſt, and the true Proteſtant Religion, might in ſome meaſure be promoted by this Service, and that his Example in the City, of undergoing it, might be a Means the more to perſuade others not to decline it.

Upon theſe Grounds he chearfully marched forth with a gallant Regiment of the City, which, as I remember, was called the Orange Regiment, and went from the Army with the commanded Party ſent for the reducing of Newport-Pannel.

This was the Condition of this Gentleman, and of many other Perſons of like Quality and Fortune in thoſe times, who had ſuch Affection for their Religion, and the Rights and Liberties of their Country, that pro aris & focis, they were willing to undergo any Hardſhips or Dangers, and thought no Service too much, or too great for their Country, but what Requital (if they had done it for a Requital) their Country gave them, you will find afterwards in the Story.

He ſeeing the King's Forces advancing towards him, cried out Tom and Jack, and other Names, as if there had been many about him, and when he diſcerned the King's Soldiers to come near him, he made a ſhift to fire a Gun that ſtood juſt againſt them, which in that narrow Lane did ſo great Execution both upon Men and Horſe, that in a great Terror they faced about, brought off their dead, carrying their Bodies back to Reading, but left many Horſes, and much Blood in the Lane, and in the way to Reading.

A difference of Opinion was between the two Houſes; the Lords would have a new Committee named, to conſider of Propoſitions of Peace: the Commons would have that Buſineſs referred to the Committee of both Kingdoms.

In the debate of this Matter, ſome of the Houſe of Commons ſeemed averſe to any Propoſitions at all for Peace: Amongſt others, I ſpoke to this Effect.

Mr. Speaker,

It would be no wonder to ſee an unanimous Concurrence of the whole Houſe in furthering Propoſitions for a good Peace.

The Calamities of our Diſtractions have brought us to it, and who is there amongſt us, that hath not in ſome meaſure felt the Strokes of them; I am ſure, Sir, I have ſmarted by them.

We may ſay here, but, I hope, never with the like Application, what Tacitus ſaid of the Romans, Omnia diſcordiis civilibus feſſa.

The Land is weary of our Diſcords, being thereby polluted with our Blood.

God hath given you great Succeſſes in many Places againſt our Enemies, and ſometimes he is pleaſed to give our Enemies Succeſſes againſt us; in all of them, whether of the one or the other Party, the poor Engliſh are ſtill Sufferers.

Whoſe Goods (I pray Sir) are plundred? whoſe Houſes are burnt? whoſe Limbs are cut, or ſhot off? whoſe Perſons are thrown into loathſome Dungeons? whoſe Blood ſtains the Walls of our Towns, and defiles our Land? 19 Car.

Is it not all Engliſh? and is it not then time for us who are all Engliſhmen, to be weary of theſe Diſcords, and to uſe our utmoſt Endeavours to put an end to them.

I know, Sir, you are all here of the ſame Opinion with me in this Point; and that it was an unhappy Miſtake of thoſe who told us in the beginning of our Warfare, "That it would be only to ſhew our ſelves "in the Field with a few Forces, and then all would "be preſently ended."

We have found it otherwiſe; let us now again ſeek to recover theſe Bleſſings of Peace, whereof we are told, that Nihil tam populare quam pax, That nothing is than Peace more gracious to be heard of, more pleaſing to be deſired, and more profitable to be enjoyed.

I am ſorry we have ſo much, and ſo ſad Experience, as well as other Arguments, to convince us of this Truth.

You think beſt to refer it to the Committee of both Kingdoms, and you cannot find more able and faithful Men to truſt in this Buſineſs: the Lords think fit that another Committee be named, to whom this may be referred.

Whilſt we differ upon the Committee, we loſe the Buſineſs, and do not purſue Peace. I am perſuaded, Sir, you can hardly name any Committee, either within, or without theſe Walls, but would be ready to take Pains to effect this good Work.

Unleſs it were thoſe who have ſaid, "That if this "War be well managed, it may laſt twenty Years." But thoſe were not Engliſhmen: And although we have Iriſh, French, Dutch, and Walloons, as well as other Papiſts, engaged for the Settlement of the Proteſtant Religion, and Laws of England:

Yet I am perſuaded, that his Majeſty and you mutually endeavouring (as it is both your Intereſts) none can hinder it.

It is true, that theſe Foreigners help to open the Veins wider, but a Peace will rid us of them, and ſtop the Iſſue of Blood; but if it bleed on ſtill, we muſt faint, and perhaps become a Prey to Foreigners.

Sir, I humbly move that we may endeavour without more loſs of time, to ſatisfy the Lords with Reaſons, that it is fitteſt to have this Matter referred to the Committee of both Kingdoms.

Yet if their Lordſhips ſhall not be ſatisfied herein, let us conſent to name another Committee, rather than to ſuffer ſo deſirable a Buſineſs to be protracted. Let us conſent to any thing that is juſt, reaſonable, and honourable, rather than in the leaſt, to neglect to ſeek Peace, and to enſue it.

The Commons appointed a Committee to draw up Reaſons to ſatisfy the Lords, that it was fitteſt to refer this Matter to the Committee of both Kingdoms.

The Lord Howard of Eſcricke had an Allowance out of Sequeſtrations, in ſatisfaction of his Loſſes, and the firſt Precedent herein was of a Lord.

Captain Weere going with a Party from Lyme, was ſurprized by the King's Forces, and moſt of his Men taken Priſoners, and carried to Collington, and divers killed.

Captain Thomas Pyne having Intelligence thereof, went out the ſame Night with a Party of the Garriſon of Lyme to Collington, where he found them in Jollity for their Succeſs; and falling upon them, he took the Colonel, ſeveral inferior Officers, about ſixty Soldiers, and many Horſe and Arms, and reſcued all their Priſoners.

The Enemy aſſaulting Lyme, Major Rutsford with a Party of the Garriſon ſallied out, and beat them back, took about three hundred Priſoners, one Braſs piece of Ordnance, and great ſtore of Arms.

Prince Rupert took Bolton in Lancaſhire by Storm, after three Repulſes; which ſo irritated the Prince's Forces, that they put to the Sword many, after they had laid down their Arms; and among them were named four Miniſters, Heycocke, Tilsbury, Harper, and Fogge; this was highly diſcourſed of by the Parliament Party, That a Foreign Prince ſhould be allowed to exerciſe ſo much ſeverity upon the lives of the Engliſh in their own Country. 20 Car.

Gen. Eſſex.

Coningham one of Eſſex's Colonels, having his Arm ſhot off by a great Shot, was ſo far from being daunted at it, that he held up his other Arm, and ſaid, I have yet another Arm left to fight for the Parliament: but he died not long after. Colonel Coningham.

At Burford the King was fain in Perſon to drive his Soldiers out of the Town.

Laud. The Archbiſhop was again brought to his Trial, and urged againſt him, That he ſo furniſhed the King's Chapel, that Seminary Prieſts would come thither for their Devotion and Adoration: and ſome of them were inſtanced, who ſaid, they knew no difference between their Churches, and this Chapel, and ſome other of our Churches, as they were new ordered.

The King went from Burford with five thouſand Horſe and Foot, twenty Carriages, and ſome ſmall Drakes, Sir William Waller cloſely purſued him; they are ſuppoſed to intend for Worceſter, and ſo to Shrewsbury, that they may the more conveniently join, as there ſhall be occaſion with Prince Rupert.

The chief Commanders before Lyme were Prince Maurice, the Lord Pawlet, and Sir John Borelace, with about 2500 Horſe and Foot in all.

It was much wondred at, that this Town could ſo long hold out, being of little Strength, more than by the Courage of their Men, and ſituate low under a Hill, which was of great advantage to the Beſiegers, and they were ſometimes brought unto ſuch ſtraits, that their Water was noiſome with the Blood of thoſe ſlain, and they much wanted proviſion of Victuals, and Ammunition which the Earl of Warwick ſupplied.

The Parliament ordered the Lord General to purſue the King, and Sir William Waller to march into the Weſt, which was contrary to the General's liking, and it was thought ſtrange that the Committee of both Kingdoms would at that diſtance take upon them to give particular Orders, for the Services and courſe of their Armies March, and not rather to leave it to the chief Commanders that were upon the Place, and who upon every motion of the Enemy, might ſee cauſe to alter their Counſels.

This increaſed the jealouſies and peeks between the General and Waller, both gallant Men; but the General thought himſelf undervalued, and Waller was high enough: Nor did there want Pick-thanks to blow thoſe Coals of jealouſy; and this proved unhappy to the Parliament Affairs, as will appear afterwards. Peeks.

The Earl of Newcaſtle ſent to General Leven, to know the Cauſe of his drawing thither: Leven anſwers, That he wondred Newcaſtle ſhould be ignorant thereof; that his intent was to bring that City to the obedience of the King and Parliament; and therefore for avoiding farther effuſion of Blood, he ſummoned him once more to render the Town. York.

The Earl of Newcaſtle, Sir Thomas Widderington, and other chief Commanders, with a ſtrong Party ſallied out of the Town, endeavouring to eſcape, but were driven back into the City, from whence they, ſhooting at a Tent where Leven was, took off part of the Tent, but did no other hurt.

Sudley Caſtle in Glocesterſhire was yielded to Sir William Waller at mercy, and taken in it nine Captains, twenty two inferior Officers, and all the common Soldiers, of whom a hundred and fifty took the Covenant, and liſted themſelves for the Parliament: they took here likewiſe 4000*l.* worth of Cloth. Sudley Caſtle.

But the Earl would not ſo leave his Friends engaged, but in Perſon led on his Party, and charged the Enemy ſo hotly that they retreated in diſorder, and the Earl reſcued and brought off his Forlorn, and the Enemy loſt about a hundred of their Men, beſides many Officers and common Soldiers taken Priſoners by the Earl, and loſt but ſeventeen of his own Men.

The King's Letter was with more than ordinary mildneſs, inviting the General to join with him in that which is both their Aims, to make the Kingdom happy, and to engage the King to him in the higheſt degree, and if any ſhall oppoſe them, to make them happy againſt their Wills, and promiſeth great Rewards to him and his Army.

The Letters from the others were to perſuade the General to embrace His Majeſty's Offer, and that if he would come and treat with them, he ſhould be as ſafe as in his own Tent, and that a Committee of both Parties might be nominated to treat of thoſe Matters.

A Party

Anno 1644. A Party of the Enemy being quartered about Biſſeter in Oxfordſhire, Captain Ennis met with them, and both Parties fought deſperately. The Aſſembly had leave to debate the whole matter of the Ordinance, for Ordination of Miniſters, and for ſettling the Government of the Church. I attended that Debate, and the Queſtion being there propounded to be put that the Government of the Church by Presbyteries is Jure Divino, I ſpake to that Queſtion in the Aſſembly, to this Effect.

Jure Divino.

Mr. Prolocutor,

I might bluſh to ſpeak in this reverend Aſſembly upon the Queſtion now in debate before you, had I not, by the honour of being one of your Members, ſeen your Candor to others, and obſerved you to be moſt able to give Satisfaction to any Scruples here, and to enable ſuch as I am to ſatisfy Objections abroad, whereof I have met with ſome, your Queſtion (it ſeems) not being under ſecrecy.

It is ſaid, Sir, That this Queſtion is very large and comprehenſive, and they inſtance upon the Terms of it, Government, Church, Presbyteries, and Jure Divino; all which, they ſay, are of various Significations, and your meaning by them not eaſy to be underſtood.

The Word Government you well know, Sir, is proper for the guidance of a Ship, ſo Cicero uſeth it, Et ſi in ipſa gubernatione, negligentia Navis eſt everſa. And ſo in Plutarch Τέχνη κυβερνητική, is the act of ſteering a Ship. And the Greek Word κυβέρνησις, from whence ſome fetch our Engliſh Word Government, hath the ſame ſenſe.

All take it for the prudent and well ordering and managing of Perſons and Affairs, that Men may live well and happily; and this I alſo take to be your ſenſe in the Word Government.

The Word Church, I confeſs, admits more variety of Interpretations, and I muſt not waſte ſo much of your time, nor is it needful, to Perſons of your great Learning to reckon them.

And ſometimes it is taken in the large ſenſe of all Believers, and ſometimes in the ſenſe of every particular Congregation of God's People, and of Believers in a Nation, and you know the Greek Poet takes Ἐκκλησιάσασαι for Meetings of Mirth or Jollity.

But, to take the Word in the ſenſe wherein it was firſt introduced by the Popiſh Clergy, I am ſure, will not be admitted by you.

They uſed indeed many canting Expreſſions, as Eccleſiaſtical and Lay, Spiritual and Temporal, Church and State, and the like; and all were to make a diſtinction between themſelves, and other Men, that they might be accounted more holy, and as a diſtinct Nation in the Midſt of the Nation; to bring more Reverence and Privilege, and Money to them, than otherwiſe they could obtain. 20 Car.

Some would ſay of the Puritans, that they uſed a kind of canting Language, to bring them into the more ſcorn. I am ſure, the Imputation is more juſt upon the Popiſh Clergy; who by this canting would exclude all others but themſelves to be of the Church of Chriſt, and exalt themſelves above their Brethren.

Whereas doubtleſs, every one though never ſo much (as they term him) a Lay-man, is as much a Member of the Church (if he be a Believer) as they that wear Cowls, or Hoods, or Canonical Coats, or Tippets.

But I ſuppoſe you mean by Government of the Church, the ordering and ruling of Matters and Perſons having relation to the Worſhip of God in the meetings of his People in the Church, or in things belonging thereunto, which by ſome are called Spiritual Matters.

Thereupon it is objected by ſome that Government being a Civil thing, cannot be exerciſed about things that are Spiritual; Government is only external, and Spiritual things are only internal, not capable of being ordered by any but the καρδιογνώστης, the great Knower of Hearts, and are become the Power of Government of Men.

But this Notion may go too far perhaps; I hope to be informed by your learned Debates, to a clearer underſtanding of it, and ſhall paſs to the next Term of the Queſtion, Presbytery.

This Word, they ſay, was unknown till of late in the ſenſe many do now uſe it; that among the Jews it was the higheſt Honour and Dignity given to the Members of their Great Sanhedrim; and therefore is not now ſo properly to be attributed to the Rulers of every ſmall Congregation: I am none of thoſe, Mr. Prolocutor, who except againſt the Presbyterian Government, I think it hath a good Foundation, and hath done much good in the Church of Chriſt.

But, Sir, whether this Form of Government be Jure Divino or not, may poſſibly admit of ſome diſpute, and whether it be now requiſite for you to declare that it is ſo.

If the meaning be that it is Jure Divino Eccleſiaſtico, then the Queſtion will be raiſed of the Magiſtrate's impoſing Forms, and upon Mens Conſciences, for then this will be the Magiſtrate's Impoſition Jure Divino Eccleſiaſtico.

But if the meaning be Jure Divino Abſolutè, this is more than an impoſing by the Magiſtrate; it is the Precept of God, and they are in a ſad condition, both Magiſtrates and People, who are not under this Government.

But it is objected that no Form of Government is Jure Divino in this or that particular, but in the general only, Let all things be done decently and in order. A Government is Jure Divino, but whether this or that Government, whether Presbytery, Epiſcopacy, Independency, or any other Form of Government be Jure Divino or not, whether there be a Preſcript, Rule, or expreſs Command of the Holy Scripture, for any of theſe particulars will not be admitted by many men, as a clear thing.

It may be therefore not unworthy your Conſideration, whether to give occaſion for theſe Diſputes or not; if you ſhall think fit at this time to forbear to declare your Judgments in this Point, the truth nevertheleſs will continue the ſame, and not wronged thereby.

If this Government be not Jure Divino, no opinion of any Council can make it to be what it is not; and if it be Jure Divino, it continues ſo ſtill, although you do not declare it to be ſo.

Anno 1644. I therefore humbly ſubmit it, Sir, to your grave Judgments, whether it be not better at this time, when Diſputes upon ſuch Subjects as theſe, are too apt to be raiſed, to avoid giving occaſion for them, which will but retard that Settlement of Government that is deſired; and high time it were done.

And that you may be pleaſed to preſent your Judgments to the Parliament, that the Government of the Church by Presbyteries is moſt agreeable to the word of God, and moſt fit to be ſettled in this Kingdom, or in what other expreſſions, you may much better know than I, it is fit to cloath your Queſtions; and I hope you may ſoon have a deſired Iſſue.

City. Divers of the Propoſitions for a Peace were paſſed, and the Houſe ſent to the City, that if they deſired to have any thing inſerted in the Propoſitions, they would be willing to receive it: which was kindly taken by the City.

The Commons ordered ſome Prizes unduly taken to be reſtored to the Owners.

A Party of Prince Rupert's Forces were fallen upon ſome of the Lancaſter Forces, and of the Earl of Manchester, who ſlew 30, and took 100 of the Prince's Men Priſoners.

Middleton encountred a Party of the King's Forces in Somerſetſhire, took about 200 Horſe, one Colonel, divers inferior Officers, and 38 common Soldiers; he wrote alſo that the King's Army was in ſuch want of Proviſions that a penny Loaf was there ſold for ſix Pence.

The General's Army and the King's often faced one another; the General's Men took a Captain and ſome inferior Officers, and 48 common Soldiers of Sir Richard Greenville's own Troop.

It was certified by Letters, that Sir Francis Doddington meeting an honeſt Miniſter upon the way near Taunton, asked him who art thou for, Prieſt? who anſwered, for God and his Goſpel: whereupon Doddington ſhot the Miniſter to Death. 20 Car.

Middleton took thirty Horſe of one of the King's Convoys near Briſtol.

The Commons took order touching the Trade of Fiſhing at Yarmouth, and a Payment to be made by Fiſhers.

Ireland. Six Troops of the Proteſtants in Ireland routed fifteen Troops of the Rebels, and had many miraculous Succeſſes againſt them; the Parliament took care for ſupply of them.

The Rebels in Ulſter with an Army of 22000, intended to have maſſacred all the Engliſh and Scots there, but the Lord Monroe with 14000 Proteſtants fought with them, wholly diſperſed, and killed, and took many thouſands of them, and Cattle, and other Proviſion for a Month, which the Rebels left behind them, and whereof the Proteſtants then were in great want.

General Eſſex. Letters from the General certify, that Aug. 21, the King's Army drew up near to the General in Battalia, who ſent out a forlorn hope, and a Party of Horſe and Foot to ſecond them; the forlorn fired, and retreated to the reſerve, and they alſo charged the Enemy, killed many, and forced the reſt to retreat; and the Lord General kept the Field that Night.

That the next Morning the Enemy appeared again, and was beaten back by the Parliament's Forces, who behaved themſelves with very great Courage, doing great Execution, but the certain number of the ſlain on either ſide was not known; that he hoped Middleton was on his way towards him.

The Prince Elector was brought to Whitehall with great reſpect by a Committee of Parliament.

September 1644. Letters from the General to the Parliament, inform, that they had the beſt in many Skirmiſhes, and acknowledge God's Plot. Goodneſs in delivering them and the whole Army from a Conſpiracy of the Enemy, to blow up two of his Waggons with 60 Barrels of Powder in them.

That when they thought to have effected this Deſign, they drew up their whole Body towards that part of the Parliament's Army, expecting the blowing up of his Magazine; upon which they intended to fall upon his Forces, and not to have given Quarter to any of them.

This Plot was ſo cloſely carried, and ſo near effecting, that in each of the Waggons, an Engine was placed to do the Work, the ends of them faſtned to lighted Matches, which were burnt within an inch of the Wild-fire when it was diſcovered, and the other Match was burnt to the very neck of the Engine, where it was to give Fire, and there the Coal of it ſelf went out.

The Engine was ſent up, and ſhewed to the Parliament, by which the Strangeneſs of it, and the miraculous Deliverance from that Plot, appeared.

Letter from Eſſex. The Letter concludes, If ſuccour come not ſpeedily, we ſhall be put to great extremity: if we were in a Country where we could force the Enemy to fight, it would be ſome comfort, but this Country conſiſts ſo much upon paſſes, that he who can ſubſiſt longeſt, muſt have the better of it; which is a great Grief to me, who have the command of ſo many gallant Men. My Lords, I am ſorry I have no diſcourſe more pleaſing, reſting

Your Faithful Servant,

ESSEX.

Upon this Letter the Houſe ordered, that the Earl of Mancheſter ſhould ſend a Party of Horſe and Foot for the aſſiſtance of the General, but neither any from him, who was indeed fartheſt off, nor of Waller's Forces (who ſome thought did not make much haſte in this Buſineſs) nor Middleton, nor any other of the Parliament's Forces, but his own Army, came up to give him any the leaſt aſſiſtance.

Liberty was given to Delinquents, who were gone beyond Sea, to return hither to make their Compoſitions with the Parliament.

A Meſſage of Compliment was ſent to the Prince Elector, and likewiſe to acquaint his Highneſs, that the Parliament conceived that his Reſidence at this time in Foreign Parts might be of greater advantage to the Publick. 20 Car. Pr. Elector.

Indeed the Parliament were jealous, conſidering his near Relation to the King, and the Engagements of his Brothers in the King's Service, that the Prince Elector would do no good Offices for the Parliament here.

The Archbiſhop was again brought to the Bar of the Lords Houſe, where he made his laſt general Defence to the Charge againſt him, and a Day was appointed for the Commons to make their Reply. Laud.

In the Archbiſhop's Diary under his own hand are Paſſages of his being offered to be made a Cardinal, which he ſaid that he could not ſuffer, till Rome were other than it is.

The Prince Elector ſent a Meſſage to the Parliament, That he held himſelf much obliged to them for their former favours; that his coming was to expreſs that in Perſon which he had often done by Letters, of his affection to them, and the Cauſe which they maintain; and to take off ſuch Jealouſies as the Actions of his neareſt Kindred, or ill Offices of the Enemy might by his Abſence caſt upon him. Pr. Elector.

That his Wiſhes are conſtant for their good Succeſs, for a thorow Reformation, and his Deſires are to be ruled and adviſed by their grave Counſels, and would be ready to ſerve them.

Sir William Brereton's Letters informed, that he ſent Colonel Jones with a Party, who fell upon 2000 Horſe of Prince Rupert's about Malpas took 140 Horſe, two Majors, and divers inferior Officers and Soldiers; ſlew Colonel Baines, and Colonel Connyers in the place, with three Majors, and 100 Common Soldiers, routed the whole Brigade, and forced them to fly back to Cheſter, and Sir Marmaduke Langdale was wounded in the Fight. Col. Jones.

This Colonel Jones was a Barriſter at Law, a Gentleman tam Marte, quàm Mercurio, and ſhews that the undertaking of a Civil Profeſſion doth not diſable, but rather farther a Man in Martial Affairs when there is occaſion of Trial.

Major Dowet marching with a Party of the Parliament's Forces in Somerſetſhire, was ſet upon by Captain Poulton, whom he took Priſoner, with his Lieutenant, thirty Horſe, and twenty Soldiers, and routed all the Party.

Colonel Sands for the Parliament beſieged Pomfret Caſtle, and Sir Thomas Fairfax was before Hemſley Caſtle, where he was ſhot into his Shoulder, and well again.

The Commons took order to reconcile ſome private Differences between ſome Major Generals, and the Aſſociations under them.

Colonel Purefoy, and Colonel Boſwell came up with Forces, and ſome Ordnance to aſſiſt the Beſiegers of Banbury.

The Commiſſioners for the Court Marſhal kept a particular Faſt-day, to pray to God for his Directions to them in that Buſineſs.

A Committee was appointed to meet with the Common Council of London, and to adviſe with them touching the Buſineſs of Farthings.

Letters from Sir William Waller deſire the Supplies allotted to him may be ſpeedily ſent, and the Forces that are to join with him; he expreſſeth his forwardneſs to aſſiſt the Lord General, and calls the God of Heaven to witneſs, it is not his Fault, and wiſheth the Blood and Infamy may reſt on the Heads of them that lay obſtructions in his way, averring Waller.

Anno 1644. Middleton.

ring that if Money cannot be had, he will march without it.

That he received a Letter from Lieutenant General Middleton, who is advanced as far as he can to relieve the Lord General, but he hears there is a very great Party of the King's Army drawn out to meet him, and yet keep the Lord General at a Bay. That he deſires nothing more under God, than to be able to march, and no fault ſhall be found in him.

By Letters from Plymouth the Houſe were certified touching the making of Proviſions for the Lord General's Army, and that many Priſoners had taken the Covenant, and freely undertook to ſerve the Parliament againſt the Iriſh Rebels.

That at Leſtithiel the Duty hath been ſo conſtant and various, the Enemy ſo near and vigilant, that we cannot muſter; we have ſick Men ſent hither, who if not timely ſent, do die ſoon after they come here, freſh Diet being their only Cure.

The Chirurgeons of the Army are ill ſtored with Proviſions, ſome not having to the value of 10*s*.

The Enemy increaſeth daily upon our Quarters, the Loſs of Foy-harbour, is to our infinite diſadvantage, no Ships being able to ride out of the command of their Guns. The Lord Admiral made a gallant Attempt to have regained the Harbour, but extremity of Weather would not ſuffer him to land one Man.

Major Skippon's Glove and Sleeve was ſhot through, and his Buff in two places, and he had no harm.

Additional Forces being come to Sir William Waller, he advanced with them Weſtward, to join with Middleton and Maſſey, to make up a Body to relieve the Lord General; and 4000 Foot, and 3000 Horſe from the Earl of Manchester, were upon their march to aſſiſt the General, but all of them had loſt too much time.

Letters from the General informed, that the King with all his power drew out upon him, that he ſent out ſeveral Parties that skirmiſhed with them; at length a great Party of the Horſe being engaged, they ſlew many of the Enemy, and forced their Paſſage through the King's Army, and through the numerouſneſs of the Enemy could hardly retreat, ſo that the Foot being left to ſtand upon their own Guard in a place of advantage, there was a Parley enter'd into, by which it was agreed, that Major Skippon, who fought like a Lion with the Foot, ſhould march away, with the loſs of ſome Ordnance and Ammunition, and have a ſafe Conduct for 6000 Foot to Dorcheſter.

By this we may ſee the great difference in Relations of martial Performances, always according to the particular intereſt of the Relators; and it is certain, that in a Fight, the next Man can hardly make a certain Relation of the Actions of him that was next in Place to him. 20 Car. Different relations.

For in ſuch a hurry and ſmoke as is in a Fight, and when a Man ſcarce takes notice of any thing but what relates to his own immediate Safety, it is hard to give any clear account of particular Paſſages, but the general will make way for it ſelf by the conſequence and iſſue.

Therefore for better ſatisfaction, I ſhall give an impartial Relation of that Action in Cornwal, neither favouring nor cenſuring the one ſide or the other, as it ought to be the temper of all faithful Hiſtorians. The true Account.

The King marched after Eſſex who was gone Weſtward, and by the overruling counſel of the Lord Roberts was perſuaded into the narrow nooſe of Cornwal.

The King came to Liskerd, eight Miles from Leſtithiel where Eſſex was, and was there encompaſſed by the King and Prince Maurice at Boconnock, Sir Richard Greenville at Bodmyn, and Sir Jacob Aſhley at Hule.

The King's Party were deſirous to fight, but upon conſultation, it was held more adviſable to ſtarve the Parliament's Forces; to which end Goring with a Party of Horſe, and Sir Tho. Baſſet with 1500 Foot, were ſent Weſtward to ſtop all Proviſions that way, and to ſtraiten Eſſex, by keeping his Horſe and Foot cloſe together.

Eſſex drew his Cannon and Baggage towards Foy, but in thoſe bad ways his Carriages ſtuck, and they were much hindered by it.

Sir William Belfore with 2300 Horſe brake through the King's Quarters, and got to Saltaſh, and from thence to Plymouth.

The King purſues his advantage againſt Eſſex's Foot with great wiſdom and gallantry, and they made a ſtout reſiſtance; but being overpowered by the King's Forces, which lay round about them, and then the Country riſing in great numbers upon them, and killing divers of their Men in their Quarters, Eſſex quits his own Forces, and with divers of his chief Officers makes by Sea for Plymouth, leaving Skippon with the Foot, and a few Horſe behind him.

Some came by deſign to the Parliament's Forces, intimating that the King was willing to admit of a Treaty with them, and it was great wiſdom, and gallantry in the King, rather to defeat them with their own Conſents, than to hazard the doubtful trial of a Battle for it.

Skippon calls together his Field-Officers to a Council of War, and being more a Soldier than an Orator, ſpake plainly to them to this purpoſe. Skippon.

Gentlemen,

You ſee our General, and many of our chief Officers, have thought fit to leave us, and our Horſe are got away, we are left alone upon our defence; that which I propound to you, is this, that we having the ſame Courage as our Horſe had, and the ſame God to aſſiſt us, may make the ſame trial of our Fortunes, and endeavour to make our way through our Enemies, as they have done; and account it better to die with honour, and faithfulneſs, than to live diſhonourably.

Few of the Council of War did concur with him, but were generally for a Treaty with the King, alledging the advantages the Horſe had, to break through the Enemy, which the Foot had not

Anno 1644. not, and that the General was then with them, and added Courage to his Men: Whereas the Foot were now more dismayed by his going away, and having few or no Horse to assist them; and other Arguments were alledged to accept of a Treaty, and accordingly Commissioners on both parts were appointed.

For the King were Prince Maurice, General Ruthen, and the Lord Digby; for the Parliament were Colonel Berkley, Colonel Wichcotes, and Colonel Butler, who agreed upon Articles, Sept. 2. to this effect.

Articles. To deliver up to the King all their Artillery, with all their Bag and Baggage, no Person under a Corporal to wear any kind of Weapon, all Officers above, to wear only Sword and Pistols; there were delivered up 40 Pieces of Brass Ordnance, 200 Barrels of Powder, Match and Bullet proportionable, 9000 Arms for Horse and Foot.

Some of the private Soldiers listed themselves in the King's Service, and some of the rest as they marched forth, being pillaged by the King's Soldiers, Skippon rode up to the King, who stood to see them pass by, and told him, It was against his honour and justice, that his Articles should not be performed, that his Soldiers did pillage some of the Parliament's Soldiers, contrary to the Articles, and desired his Majesty to give order to restrain them. The King thereupon gave a more strict command for the punctual Observation of the Articles, and Skippon with his Men marched to Poole.

We may take notice by this chiefly, and by several other passages, of the uncertain Issues of War, and of the overruling hand of Providence in Martial Affairs, as much, if not more than in other matters.

It was but a few Weeks before, that Essex and Waller with two great Armies, were in pursuit of the King, who could scarce find a way to avoid them, and the Parliament's Power and Expectation was far above that of the King.

Now the Die of War is turned another way, the Parliament's Army is defeated, disarmed and dispersed, and the King becomes victorious.

This did much affright some of the Parliament's Party, and caused several discourses among them.

Essex blamed. Divers who were no Friends to Essex inveighed against him, as one that had quitted his Command, and deserted his Army in the greatest Danger, others excused and commended him for this Action, by which means only he could reserve himself, his Officers and Soldiers to do the Parliament farther Service.

Others condemned Waller, Manchester and Middleton, for not hastening more to the Assistance of the General; every one vented his own fancy and censure, but doubtless, he was a Person of as much Integrity, Courage and Honour, as any in his Age; he was brought into this noose, by the wilfulness of others, and though his Enemies took advantage against him upon it, yet many thought others to be more in fault than the General.

Letters from Scotland informed the Parliament that the Marquis of Argyle had taken 500 of the Rebels which came over with the Earl of Antrim to disturb the Peace of that Kingdom.

The General having thoughts to come up to the Parliament, to give them a particular account of this unhappy Action, and to excuse himself to the Parliament, they wrote to him, that they continue fully satisfied that he was not wanting to use his utmost Endeavours in that Service, and were well assured of his Fidelity, desiring him, to entertain no thoughts of Discontent, or Discouragement, but to go on in the managing of the War, Sir Will. Waller and other Forces being ready to join with him. 20 Car.

Excused by the Parliament.

The Commons took order for Supplies of Cloaths and Arms for his Soldiers, and for the Earl of Manchester's marching towards him, and appointed a day of publick Humiliation.

The Sickness being at St. James's, the Parliament ordered the removal of the King's Children from thence to Whitehall.

Colonel William Strowde wrote to the House, that 300 Men of the adjacent parts were come to him to serve the Parliament, and that he had sent from Wareham 1000 Arms to the Lord General.

A Committee of both Houses were sent to give entertainment to the Chancellor of Scotland, who was newly come to Town.

The Lord Roberts was made Governor of Plymouth.

By Letters from Sir Thomas Middleton the House was informed, that Lieutenant Colonel Tyll, being sent by him, took Sir Thomas Gardiner the Recorder's Son, with his Officers, and forty of his Troopers Prisoners, and the rest fled; that he also took two Colours, and four Wain-load of Powder and Ammunition.

Lieutenant General Lesley fell upon the Forces of Sir Philip Musgrave, and Colonel Fletcher in Westmorland, killed divers on the place, took above 100 Prisoners, two foot Colours, a Standard, and scattered the rest. Lesley.

The King marched out of Cornwal, and sent a Summons to Plymouth to be rendered to him, but they returned a positive answer in the Negative.

About 1500 of the King's Foot out of several Garrisons mounted for Dragoons, by Night marched towards Basing-house; Colonel Norton and Colonel Morley took the Alarm, Norton charged them, and brake through them, but they with great Courage wheeled about, and charged Norton's whole Body, who retreated unto Colonel Morley's Quarters.

In the mean time they got some Supplies of Ammunition and Provisions into the House; Norton and Morley faced them, but they would not fight, but retreated back again, and were pursued, and 150 of them killed and taken, one Major, with other inferior Officers. Norton had a slight hurt in the hand, and lost but one Man, but the House was relieved.

This Party of the King's gave an Alarm to Browne, at Abington, who shortly after gave an Alarm to them at Oxford, and brought away 40 of their fat Cattle, Salt, and other Provisions.

Sir Rich. Greenville attempted thrice by Storm to enter Plymouth, but was repulsed.

Middleton routed Prince Rupert in his passage towards the King with seven hundred Horse, took divers of his Officers, and about ninety common Soldiers Prisoners.

Brereton routed the Earl of Derby coming to relieve Liverpool, and killed and took five hundred of them, and put the rest to flight.

Major General Browne, was not a little dissatisfied with matters relating to his Charge, as appears by this Letter from him to me.

Honoured Sir,

I Received your Letter, do well approve of the compleating my Regiment, and of the Windsor, but shall advise it may be forborne, unless there can be a more certain way of paying them, else you will (as we do

Anno 1644. do daily) loſe both Men and Arms. I have been conſtrained for want of Money to ſend for Victuals into the Country for the poor hungry Soldiers, am now forbidden that both by the Comptroller at Ailesbury and Reading; truly, Sir, we cannot, muſt not ſtarve. Sir, I pray ſuffer me from the Civility I have always found from you, and ſhall acknowledge, to aſſure you that as I have endeavour'd to my utmoſt the Service of theſe Counties, ſo I ſhall be as willing (might I receive any Encouragements) but theſe things and many other make me requeſt, that I may rather be diſcharged from the Employment than thus labour under ſo many wearing Griefs. Sir, I thank you for your Letter and Reſpects, ſhall never forget thoſe formerly received and ſtill preſerved in the Memory of

Abington, September 16, 1644. Your Thankful Friend and Servant,

RICHARD BROWNE.

An Ordinance paſſed the Commons for Ordination of Miniſters, and was ſent to the Aſſembly for them to add Miniſters Names who ſhould give Ordination.

A Difference was between the Lord Grey, and the Aſſociation of Leiceſterſhire.

Summons to Plymouth. The King ſent a Summons to Plymouth, That God having given him Victory over the Rebels, he deſired to reduce his People by Acts of Grace; and promiſed eſpecial Favour to Plymouth, if they would render the Town to him, and that they ſhould have no Garriſon.

A Letter was likewiſe ſent at the ſame time from the Lord Digby to the Lord Roberts, inviting him upon high Engagements of Preferment, and Honour from the King, to ſurrender the Town up to him. But they prevailed neither with the Governor, nor with the Townſmen, but they all prepared for defence; and the Enemy endeavouring the ſame day to ſtorm the Weſt-end of the Town, were repulſed with great Loſs; in which Action the Seamen did gallant Service.

The King's whole Army beſieged the Town, but they having four thouſand Foot, and eight hundred Horſe, did not much fear their Beſiegers; but the Lord Roberts wrote for ſome Supplies, which were ordered for them.

Letter from the King. A Letter from the King was brought to the Parliament, declaring his Affections for Peace; and concluding, that God had given him a late Victory, and therefore he deſires them to conſider of his long rejected Meſſage from Eveſham; which was for Peace, but not till this time brought to the Parliament.

The Parliament appointed a Day to take this into Conſideration, and ordered all Officers and Soldiers to repair to their Colours, on pain to be proceeded againſt by the Commiſſioners for Martial Law.

Mr. Hoyle was put into Sir Peter Osborn's Office, and Mr. Salway into Sir Thomas Fanſhaw's place in the Exchequer, and ſeveral Judges went into the Counties which were quiet, to keep Aſſizes, and to execute the Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer.

Colonel Cromwell was ſent with two thouſand Horſe to meet Prince Rupert, coming to relieve Banbury; but Colonel Maſſey had before prevented the Prince's coming.

The Iriſh Rebels that landed in Scotland, were beaten into the Mountains by the Marquiſs of Argyle, and Lord Gordon.

Upon debate of the King's Letter it was held not to be a ſufficient Acknowledgment of the Parliament, and therefore laid by: Yet the Houſe went on to compleat the Propoſitions for Peace; and a Day was appointed for the bringing in the Names of ſuch Delinquents as ſhould be excepted from pardon. 20 Car.

Miniſters Petition. Divers Miniſters of London preſented a Petition to the Parliament, for diſpatch of the Directory of Worſhip, and ſettling of pure Diſcipline and Government according to the word of God; and complained of the Schiſms in the Church.

The Petitioners had Thanks from the Houſe, and the Committee of Lords and Commons appointed to confer with the Aſſembly, to endeavour to reconcile ſome Differences among them, and to find out a way, how tender Conſciences may be born with all, ſo far as may ſtand with the Peace of the Kingdom, and the Word of God.

The Aſſembly named 23 Miniſters to give Ordination, who were paſſed.

The Commons conſidered of the Propoſitions for Peace, the Lord Macquire and Macmahon, who eſcaped out of the Tower, were again apprehended by the Lieutenant of the Tower, and Sir John Clotworthy; and upon a Report from a Committee of Lawyers, it was ordered, That they ſhould be tried by a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer, and not by Martial Law.

Fr. Agent. The French Agent lay at the ſame Houſe where Macquire and Macmahon were taken, and had a chief hand in their Eſcape, and oppoſed the Officers ſearching in that Houſe for Papers, &c. becauſe he lodged there.

But a Committee of both Houſes were appointed to ſearch there, and did ſo, notwithſtanding the Agent's Pretences.

A Committee of Lawyers was appointed to meet daily about the Trial of the Archbiſhop, till the ſame ſhould be diſpatch'd.

The Parliament order'd all the Forces of the Earl of Manchester, and of Sir William Waller, to join together, and advance into the Weſt.

The Ordinance paſſed for the Militia in Worceſterſhire.

About eighty of the Leiceſter Horſe in Convoy of ſome Carriers, were ſet upon by 120 of Colonel Haſtings's Men, but the 80 routed and diſperſed the 120, killed 8, and took 60 of them Priſoners, and ſtore of Arms.

Mount-gomery Caſtle. By Letters from Sir Thomas Middleton, it was certified, That he having taken Mountgomery Caſtle, was forced to retreat upon the coming of the King's Forces thither, who again beſieged the Caſtle with five thouſand Men; and Middleton being joined with Brereton, Sir John Meldrum, and Sir William Fairfax, in all about three thouſand, they marched to relieve the Caſtle, and were fought with by the Enemy, who came up gallantly a good while to puſh of Pike, and worſted the Parliament's Horſe; which ſo encouraged the King's Forces, that they ſhouted, and cried, The Day is ours, the Day is ours; at which the Parliament's Forces were ſo enraged, that they came on again with a freſh Charge, and wholly routed and put them to flight, took Priſoners Major General Broughton, Colonel Sir Thomas Tilſley, Lieutenant Colonel Bludwell, Major Williams, nine Captains, many inferior Officers, and fifteen hundred common Soldiers.

Of the King's Part were ſlain about three hundred, and about five hundred wounded: Of the Parliament part were ſlain, Sir William Fairfax with eleven Wounds, and Major Fitz Symons, and about forty common Soldiers, and about ſixty wounded; the Lord Biron who commanded the King's Forces hardly eſcaped by the Goodneſs of his Horſe.

Upon

Anno 1644. Upon Letters from my Lord Roberts, both Houſes took care for Supplies for Plymouth, and their other Weſtern Garriſons.

The King came to Exeter, and gave order to remove all ſuperfluous Perſons forth of the Town, and for the Country to bring in thither all their Proviſions.

About forty Priſoners of Quality were brought from Plymouth to London, and committed to Lambeth-Houſe. After the Siege was raiſed before Plymouth, and the King gone to Exeter, yet the Corniſh Men continued near the Town, to ſtop Proviſions coming to them by Land, but were driven away again.

Many of the Priſoners taken at Mountgomery, being willing to take the Covenant, and to ſerve againſt the Rebels in Ireland; the Parliament to avoid the Inconvenience of many Priſoners, conſented thereunto, and gave order for their Tranſportation.

The Commons came near to a Concluſion of their Debate, touching the Propoſitions for Peace.

Orders were ſent to the Earl of Mancheſter, and Sir William Waller, to advance together with all expedition, to prevent the King's return back to Oxford, and took care for Supplies for them, and for the Lord General.

The Commmiſſioners for the Court-Martial proceeded in the Trial of Mr. Waller, and upon his former Examinations he was earneſtly preſſed to confeſs what Members of Parliament were acquainted with his Deſign, and promiſed Favour if he would diſcover them; and he was asked whether ſuch and ſuch by name were not by him or his Complotters acquainted with it.

He did not name any on his Examination, but ſaid that whilſt the Deſign was in agitation he came to the Counteſs of Kent's Houſe in White Friers, where he found together Mr. Pierrepoint, Mr. Selden, and Mr. Whitlocke in Selden's Study, and he intended to acquaint them with his Deſign, and to have their Advice in it. But firſt he diſcourſed them in general, how eaſy it might be to effect ſuch a Deſign in London, where ſo many of the King's Friends and Servants were, and that all thoſe three Gentlemen declared their Opinions wholly againſt any ſuch Plots, and held them to be baſe and ridiculous.

That thereupon Mr. Waller ſaid, he did not think it fit or ſafe to mention the Deſign to any of them, and that he found a kind of Awe upon his Spirits, forbidding him to impart any thing of that Matter unto them.

This was revealed to me from the Committee who examined him, and was a true Paſſage.

The Parliament ſent Thanks to Sir Thomas Middleton, Sir William Brereton, and Sir John Meldrum, for their good Service at Mountgomery; and which was more acceptable, took order for Supplies for them; the Lord Cherbury and Sir John Price came in to the Parliament.

Kerle doubting that he ſhould not have quarter, becauſe he had revolted from the Parliament; to make ſome Recompence, he undertook to bring Maſſey into Monmouth, and himſelf to march in the Front, which was concluded accordingly. Mon-mouth ſurprized.

When they came to the Guards, they thinking them to be their own Men, let down the Drawbridge, and received them into the Town, who demanded it for the Parliament; at which the Garriſon was ſo amazed, that many of them fled away and left their Arms, the reſt called for Quarter, and ſo the Town and Caſtle being of great Conſequence, was reduced to the Parliament, with the loſs of not above ſix Men on both Parties.

Two Barges loaded with Biſket and Cheeſe were ſent to Reading, to be conveyed to the Army.

Gen. Eſſex. The Houſes being informed, that the Lord General was not well, and ſtayed behind the Army, they ſent a Committee of the Lords and Commons to viſit him, and to expreſs the Affections of both Houſes to him.

This was not (as was given out) a Piece of Courtſhip; but, I think, real, and there was cauſe enough that it ſhould be ſo, the General having ſo highly deſerved from them: Yet there were ſome had Deſigns againſt him, and were deſirous to remove him from his Command, becauſe they were jealous, that he was too much inclined to Peace, and favouring of the King and his Party.

I think, I knew as much of his Mind as others did, and always obſerved him to wiſh for Peace, yet not upon any diſhonourable or unjuſt Terms; he was a Lover of Monarchy and Nobility, which he ſuſpected ſome deſigned to deſtroy, together with Gentry, Miniſtry, and Magiſtracy; which humour began then to boil up, but he reſolved to ſupport them, and wanted not Advice to that end. 20 Car.

Jealouſies. But the Jealouſies upon him (who was a moſt faithful and gallant Man, and Servant to the publick) gave him great Trouble in his Thoughts, and they did work ſo high with his Enemies, that ſome gave out he was by private Intimation to forbear engaging in this Service; and for certain he was not in it.

A Party of the King's coming to relieve Banbury, were repulſed by Captain Fiennes, their Bag and Baggage taken, divers of them killed, and ſome of them taken Priſoners.

The City Propoſitions to be ſent with the general Propoſitions for Peace, were voted, and approved.

Hotham. Sir John Hotham petitioned, That he might not be tried by the Commiſſioners for the Court-Marſhal, and demanded the Judgment of the Houſe thereupon, and offered his Reaſons; but they would not hear them.

The Commons being informed, that in probability the Armies were now engaged; they ſent to the Aſſembly of Divines to ſpend ſome time in Prayer, for the good Succeſs of the Parliament's Forces, which was done accordingly.

In the Evening the ſame Day, News came to the Parliament, of a conſiderable Victory obtained by their Forces againſt the King's Army near Newbury; That the Fight began on Sunday, October 27, about three a Clock in the Afternoon; That before ſeven, they had nine Pieces of Ordnance from the Enemy, took the Earl of Cleveland, and three hundred Priſoners, killed Charles Goring, Son to the Lord Goring, Sir Humphry Mildmay's eldeſt Son, and divers others of Quality; and that the King about twelve at Night, marched with a Party towards Wallingford. Newbury. Fight.

Another Party of the Kings, under the Earl of Northampton, came to relieve Banbury, and taking the Beſiegers at unawares, made their way into the Caſtle, and relieved it, and made good their Retreat.

Scout-maſter General Bedford came to the Houſe with Leetters from the Commiſſioners in the Army, of the particulars of the Battle at Newbury, to this Effect.

That after a Week's tedious, but ſpeedy march of the Lord General's Infantry, and one night's Refreſhment at Reading; in two days farther Progreſs they drew up before Newbury, as near the Town as the Enemies Cannon would ſuffer; this was upon Friday October 25.

The King kept within the Town, guarded by his Artillery, but his Body of Horſe and Foot drew out into Speen-field, the midway between the Town and Caſtle, both to make his Army ſeem more numerous, and to imbattle them in a Place of extraordinary Advantage: That Day afforded nothing but an Interview, the interpoſing River hindred the deſire to fight.

On the King's part appeared rather a declining to be engag'd, either that their Numbers were not equal, or from an Expectation of Prince Rupert's Advance with 3000 Horſe and Dragoons, and the Return of the Earl of Northampton from Banbury with 1000.

The King's Strength is reported to have been 8000 Foot and 500 Horſe, which, albeit a gallant Army, yet upon the Parliament's Forces drawing into Battalia, they durſt not take the Field; but to counterpoiſe the Parliament's Numbers, the

King

Anno 1644. King fell to Stratagems to fortify the Town, eſpecially the Avenues, and having raiſed his Batteries, and lined the Hedges, ſtood upon his guard, and with ſome great Pieces, where he ſaw the biggeſt Bodies, and moſt advantage, liberally ſent them ſome Bullets which killed 2 or 3 Horſe, but hurt not their Riders.

For many hours, ſome Parties of Horſe skirmiſh'd 'twixt both the Armies, in which play the Parliament had the beſt; of whoſe part but one Man fell, of theirs four or five, of which one was knighted.

It being impoſſible to engage the King's Forces without much hazard, that night the greateſt part of the Parliament's Forces marched into Chevely; the Horſe commanded by Waller and Balfour, the Foot by Skippon, whilſt the other encamped before the Eaſt ſide of the Town, and ordered by Manchester, at one ſame time, having agreed to ſtorm the Garriſon on both ſides.

That night and the next, the Parliamentarians quartered in the open Fields, but neither the coldneſs of the weather, nor want of uſual Proviſion, any whit diſanimated the Soldiers, the expectation of fighting ſwallowing up all other extremities, howbeit moſt of them had three days Proviſion prepared by command in their Snapſacks.

By Daybreak upon Sunday, the Horſe and Foot commanded by Waller and Skippon, were upon their march, in four hours ſurrounded Dunnington Caſtle, and made their approach towards the Weſt of Newbury.

By the way they intercepted two or three Carts of Proviſion, and took about 100 Horſe and Foot of the King's as they ſtraggled, and the King's Forces from the Caſtle fell upon the Parliament's Rear, and took 10 or 12 Priſoners.

Upon this march they received the Report, that Newcaſtle was taken by ſtorm, and the Ulſter Rebels defeated, which much encouraged the Parliament's Forces.

It was one a Clock ere the Train and Rear came up, and near Three ere they could be put into Batalia: With extraordinary ſhouts, and other ſymptoms of Courage and Joy, the weſtern Body advanced, and by the Forlorn-hope of Horſe, quickly began the Fight, which, with as much eagerneſs, was ſeconded by the Foot, who cried, They would now be revenged for the Buſineſs of Cornwal.

For three hours the Fight was maintained with as much Reſolution and Bravery on both parts, as hath been ſince theſe Wars; the Cannon and ſmall Shot on both ſides firing with as quick a motion as was poſſible.

Among the Foot, the General's Regiment, eſpecially, did eminently well; and among all of the whole Army, there was not one Man, or Party, Horſe or Foot, ſeen either to deſert their duty, or to diſhearten their fellows. After a long and hot diſpute, the Parliamenterians beat the King's Forces, firſt from their Work, and then from their Ordnance, nine in number, in which Atchievement they loſt a few Men, and among them Captain Gawler.

The Day was of ſo much diſcontent to his Majeſty, that an hour after Midnight, he marched out of the Town with an attendant Troop only towards Wincheſter, and ſent up his Cannon, Carriages, and Baggage to the Caſtle, where at daybreak the Parliamentarians ſaw them placed, and Colonel Cromwell followed the Body of the Enemy two hours before day.

The Earl of Cleveland was taken Priſoner by a Lieutenant of Colonel Berkley's, General Goring hardly eſcaped, his Brother was ſhot dead as he charged, moſt of his Troop were cut off; Major Trevillian and divers others of quality, and 200 common Soldiers of the King's part ſlain, and 300 taken Priſoners. 20 Car.

Letters came of the taking of the Town and Caſtle of Newcaſtle, ſurrendred to the General Leven, Octob. 29. the Governor and the reſt ſubmitting for their lives. In that little compaſs of the Caſtle were 500 Men, beſides Women and Children. Three Scots Lords taken there, Crauford, Rea, and Maxwell, were ſent into Scotland to be there tried. Newcaſtle

The Town though taken by Onſlaght was not much ranſackt, moſt of them redeeming their goods from plunder, upon reaſonable ſatisfaction in Monies.

Letters from Sir William Waller, and Sir Arthur Haſlerigge, further confirmed the Parliament's ſucceſs at Newbury, and that they had taken 1000 Arms there: That if they had had but one hour more of day-light, in probability they had totally routed and diſperſed the King's whole Army; which was in ſo great diſtraction after the Fight, that they retreated three ſeveral ways at once in great confuſion: That the King (as they were informed) with a ſmall Party wheeled about by Marlborough, and ſo to Oxford.

Since the Fight they took many Priſoners ſtragglers, and the King's own Coach, and General Forth's Coach with his Lady, many Sumpter-horſes, and other good Prizes.

We went firſt to Reading to inquire where the King was, ſuppoſing the King had been at Marlborough, to which place Reading is the way, but there we were informed that the King was gone to Wallingford, and though very late, and in bad Ways and Weather, we haſted away in the Evening croſs the Country, from thence to Nettlebed, and were benighted, and in much danger in that ill Journey.

At Nettlebed which is but a little Countrey Town, there was very bad Quarter for ſo many great Perſons, but we contented ourſelves and were merry together with our ill Lodging and Entertainment.

The next Morning we went on our Journey to Wallingford, and ſtayed at Cromaſh near a Mile from the Town, whilſt we ſent a Letter to Colonel Blake the Governor, to acquaint him, that we deſired Entrance into the Town by virtue of our ſafe Conduct from the King, whom we were to wait upon with Propoſitions from the Parliament.

Blake ſent to us for our ſafe Conduct, which we deny'd to ſend to him, alledging that it was our Security for our Paſſage, and that we were not to part with it, but we ſhewed it to his Meſſenger, and gave him a Copy of it, with which he returned to the Governor, and after ſome two hours attendance, he ſent a Troop of Horſe to convoy us into the Town.

We went directly to the Governor's Quarters, who received us not rudely, but with height enough, and called for Wine for us; he told us, that he believed the King was returned to Oxford, and that it was more probable we might find him there, than in any other place.

Amongſt other Diſcourſes, he and the Earl of Denbigh fell into Relations of ſome Paſſages of War, wherein both the Earl and Colonel Blake had been Actors, and both of them being high Spirits, could not brook any diminution to the honour of each other, or of their Parties.

They differed upon ſome matters of Fact, and grew unto very high Words, inſomuch as the Lord Maitland looked very pale, and he, and others thought that they ſhould have their Throats cut by the Garriſon; and Blake looked very big upon them, and his Words were anſwerable.

All the Company held it fit to remove from this Garriſon, ſeeing the Carriage of Blake ſo full of Inſolence and Incivility, and with much Difficulty, we at laſt got into our Coaches, and took leave of the proud Governor. 20 Car.

The next Morning we took our Journey towards Oxford, and upon the Hill half a Mile before we came to the Town, we ſtayed in the Field till they ſent a Meſſenger to the Governor of Oxford Sir Jacob Aſhley, to acquaint him with our being there, to wait upon the King according to our ſafe Conduct, (whereof we ſent him a Copy) and deſired Entrance and Accommodation in the City.

The Meſſenger returned, that Sir Jacob Aſhley would acquaint his Majeſty with our being there, and know his Pleaſure about it, and then he would ſend to us accordingly; and after three or four hours ſtay in the wet and cold open Field, then came an Officer and a Troop of Horſe to convoy us into the City.

As we paſt along the Streets, the rude Multitude, the People, part of that Body for whom we underwent ſo many Hazards of our Lives and Fortunes, to preſerve them in their Rights and Liberties, and from Slavery and Popery, which ſome about the King (as was believed) endeavoured to bring upon them.

Part of this People of England, as we paſt along the Streets, reviled us with the Names of Traitors, Rogues and Rebels, and the like, and threw Stones and Dirt into our Coaches, a great Encouragement and Reward for our Service for them. We went on our way taking no notice of theſe Affronts and Abuſes, and were brought to our Quarters to a mean Inn, the Sign of the Katherine Wheele next St. John's College, which Houſe was little above the degree of an Alehouſe.

The Officer made a ſlight excuſe to us for making us ſtay ſo long before we were admitted into the Garriſon; the which (he ſaid) could not be, till the Governor had ſpoken with the King, which took up ſome time, and that the providing of Quarters for us was very difficult, in regard the Town was ſo full of the King's Forces.

After we were ſettled in our Quarters, divers of the King's great Officers and Lords came to viſit us, and we had ſome particular Friends, who came thither to us; among whom was Sir Edward Hyde, who came to viſit me, and in diſcourſe in general about the Propoſitions for Peace, profeſs'd his earneſt Deſire and Endeavour that they might take effect.

The Earl of Lindſey, who then lay ſick of Wounds he had received, ſent a Gentleman in his name to viſit Mr. Hollis and us, and to tell us, that if he had been able to come abroad he would himſelf have viſited us.

The Commiſſioners Servants inform'd us of a great buſtle in the Hall of the Inn. That ſome Officers of the King's Army came in thither to them, and fell to quarrel with them, called them, and their Maſters, and the Parliament, Rogues and Rebels, and Traitors, and would not ſuffer them to come near the Fire, upon which they quarrell'd.

Mr. Hollis went preſently to one of the King's Officers, who was there, a tall big black Man, and taking him by the Collar, ſhook him, and told him, it was baſely and unworthily done of them to abuſe their Servants in their own Quarters, and contrary to the King's ſafe Conduct, and preſently took away his Sword from him.

I did the like to another great Maſtiff Fellow, an Officer alſo of the King's Army, and took away his Sword from him.

Upon

Anno 1644. Upon this, fearing ſome Deſign upon us, and that more of the King's Officers and Soldiers would come in to affront us; they cauſed the Door of the Inn to be ſhut up, and ſent to acquaint the Governor with this Abuſe and Affront offer'd to us.

He preſently ſent a Captain, who took away thoſe two Officers who had been diſarmed, and carry'd them to Priſon; he excuſed a little the matter to the Commiſſioners, and brought a Guard of Foot Soldiers to attend at the Door of our Quarters.

This Buſineſs was much talked on among the King's Officers and Soldiers, and moſt of them ſaid, that Hollis and Whitelocke had done well and like Gentlemen, in diſarming thoſe two that offered the Affront, whom they much condemned; and we were after this quiet.

The next Day we had acceſs to his Majeſty, who uſed us civilly, and gave to every one of us his Hand to kiſs; but he ſeemed to ſhew more Diſdain to the Scots Commiſſioners, than to any others of our Company.

The Earl of Denbigh read the Propoſitions to his Majeſty, who heard them with much patience, and when they were all read, told us that he would conſider of an Anſwer to be given to us.

Hollis and I thought ourſelves obliged in Civility and Courtſhip to return a Viſit to the Earl of Lindſey: But (all the Commiſſioners having agreed that none of us ſhould ſingly give any Viſit to any of the King's Officers or great Lords, nor in Company without acquainting our Fellow Commiſſioners therewith) We thought fit to tell them our Intentions (with their leave) to return a Viſit to the Earl of Lindſey, who had ſo courteouſly firſt ſent to viſit us, and all our Fellow-Commiſſioners approved thereof, and wiſhed us to do as we intended.

The ſame Evening about Eight or Nine of the Clock, Hollis and I went to the Court to the Earl of Lindſey's Lodgings, whom we found ill, and in his Bed, and divers Lords with him; among the reſt the Lord Savile, then newly made Earl of Suſſex.

The Earl of Lindſey expreſſed much Contentment, and that he took it extreme kindly that we would come to viſit him, and treated us with extraordinary Reſpect and Courteſy; and no Man with him was ſo forward to compliment us as was the Lord Savile.

When we had been there about a quarter of an hour, the King and Prince Rupert, and divers great Lords came into the Chamber where we were. Whether ſent to, after we came, or by accident, we knew not; the King ſaluted us very civilly, and began to diſcourſe with us, part whereof was to this effect.

King. I am ſorry, Gentlemen, that you could bring to me no better Propoſitions for Peace, nor more reaſonable than theſe are.

Hollis. They are ſuch, Sir, as the Parliament thought fit to agree upon, and I hope a good Iſſue may be had out of them.

Whitelocke. We are but their Servants to preſent them to your Majeſty, and very willing to be Meſſengers of Peace.

King. I know you could bring no other than what they would ſend. But I confeſs I do not a little wonder at ſome of them, and particularly at the Qualifications.

H. Your Majeſty will be pleaſed to conſider of them as a foundation for Peace,

King. Surely you yourſelves cannot think them to be reaſonable or honourable for me to grant.

H. Truly, Sir, I could have wiſhed that ſome of them had been otherwiſe than they are, but your Majeſty knows that thoſe things are all carried by the major Vote. 20. Car.

K. I know they are, and am confident that you who are here and your Friends (I muſt not ſay your Party) in the Houſe endeavoured to have had them otherwiſe, for I know you are Well-willers to Peace.

Wh. I have had the honour to attend your Majeſty often heretofore upon this Errand, and am ſorry it was not to better effect.

K. I wiſh, Mr. Whitelocke, that others had been of your judgment, and of Mr. Hollis's judgment, and then I believe we had had an happy end of our differences before now.

H. We are bound to your Majeſty for your gracious and true opinion of us, and wiſh we had been, or may be capable to do your Majeſty better Service.

K. Your Service Mr. Hollis and the reſt of thoſe Gentlemen, whoſe deſire hath been for Peace, hath been very acceptable to me, who do earneſtly deſire it my ſelf, and in order to it, and out of the confidence I have of you two that are here with me, I ask your opinion and advice what anſwer will be beſt for me to give at this time to your Propoſitions, which may probably further ſuch a Peace as all good men deſire.

H. Your Majeſty will pardon us if we are not capable in our preſent condition to adviſe your Majeſty.

Wh. We now by accident have the honour to be in your Majeſty's preſence, but our preſent Employment diſables us from adviſing your Majeſty if we were otherwiſe worthy to do it in this particular.

K. For your abilities I am able to judge, and I now look not on you in your Employments from the Parliament, but as Friends and my private Subjects I require your advice.

H. Sir, To ſpeak in a private capacity, your Majeſty ſees that we have been very free, and touching your Anſwer, I ſhall ſay further, that I think the beſt Anſwer would be your own coming amongſt us.

Wh. Truly, Sir, I do believe that your Majeſty's Perſonal preſence at your Parliament, would ſooner put an end to our unhappy diſtractions than any Treaty.

K. How can I come thither with ſafety.

H. I am confident there would be no danger to your Perſon to come away directly to your Parliament.

K. That may be a queſtion, but I ſuppoſe your Principals who ſent you hither, will expect a preſent Anſwer to your Meſſage.

Wh. The beſt preſent, and moſt ſatisfactory Anſwer, I humbly believe, would be your Majeſty's Preſence with your Parliament, and which I hope might be without any danger to you.

H. We ſhould be far from adviſing any thing which might be of the leaſt danger to your Majeſty's perſon; and I believe your coming to your Parliament would be none; but we muſt humbly ſubmit that to your Majeſty's own pleaſure and great wiſdom.

K. Let us paſs by that, and let me deſire you two, Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke to go into the next Room, and a little to confer together, and to ſet down ſomewhat in writing, which you apprehend may be fit for me to return in anſwer to your Meſſage; and that in your judgments may facilitate and promote this good work of Peace.

H. We ſhall obey your Majeſty's command and withdraw.

We went together into another Room, where we were private, and upon diſcourſe together we apprehended that it would be no breach of truſt in us to obſerve the King's deſire herein: but that it might be a means to facilitate the work about which we came, the moſt deſirable buſineſs of Peace.

Therefore by Mr. Hollis's intreaty, and as we both agreed, I wrote down what was our ſenſe

Anno 1644. in this matter, and what might be fit for the ſubſtance of the King's Anſwer to our Meſſage: but I wrote it not in my uſual hand, nor with any name to it, nor was any perſon preſent but we two when it was written, nor did the King admit of any others to hear the diſcourſe which paſſed betwixt him and us.

The Paper which was thus written we left upon the Table in the withdrawing Room; and the King went in, and took it, and then with much favour and civility bid us farewell, and went away himſelf; after which, and a few Compliments paſſed between the Earl of Lindſey and us, we took leave of him and the reſt of the Company, and returned to our own Lodgings.

This being the truth of thoſe ſecret and private paſſages for which Hollis and I were afterwards accuſed in Parliament by the Lord Savile: No indifferent perſon can juſtly cenſure us for any Unfaithfulneſs, or the leaſt Breach of our truſt to the Parliament, whoſe Servants we then were. And this may be anſwer'd for us, that what we did herein was in compaſſion to our bleeding diſtreſſed Country, and for the effecting of that which was univerſally longed for, the Settlement of a juſt and happy Peace.

But this was not imparted by us to our fellow Commiſſioners, nor could all the Examinations at Committees and in the Houſe of Commons get it out of us.

The Parliament's Forces leaving Newbury, the King poſſeſt himſelf thereof, and the Parliament Forces lay in the Field, expecting to fight them; but the time of the year was very hard for ſuch Quarters.

The L. Macquire moved the King's Bench for ſome Monies detained from him, and that he might have paper, pen and ink allowed him, and ſome Statute-books, the better to make his Defence; all which was granted to him.

Directory. The Aſſembly of Divines ſent to the Commons the whole Directory for Worſhip, Prayer, Preaching, Baptiſm, and the Lord's-Supper agreed on by them.

The Siege before Baſing-houſe was raiſed, and the Parliament's Forces retreated to Farnham and Reading for their Winter-quarters.

The Regiments of Colonel Fleetwood and Colonel Roſſeter beat up the Enemies Quarters near Newark, took 160 Horſe, 80 Priſoners, Major Heron, and other Commanders.

The Commons appointed an Examination touching any neglects of their Armies, and the ſpinning out of the War, and of the late Miſcarriages after Newbury Fight, when they had ſo much advantage againſt the Enemy.

By Letters from Colonel Norton he informs the Houſe, that he had received a Warrant from a chief Commander in their Army, to raiſe the Siege from before Baſing-houſe, and to betake themſelves to Winter-quarters, which was a thing unexpected to him, but according to that Warrant they had withdrawn.

Jealouſies. This raiſed new Jealouſies and Diſcontents in the minds of many of the Parliament, and of their Friends.

Macmahon was executed at Tyburn, and Mr. Peters urg'd him to make confeſſion, but he would not unleſs he might have a Romiſh Prieſt.

The plea of Peerage of the Lord Macquire was allowed.

Upon Letters from Colonel Jones Governor of Farnham, the King's Army being come near him, the Parliament ordered ſome Forces to be quartered there for his Aſſiſtance.

Sir Alexander Carew being ſentenced by the Court Marſhal to have his Head cut off, his Lady petitioned that her Husband was diſtracted and unfit to die, and prayed a Reprieve for him, which was granted. 20 Car. Sir Alex. Carew.

An Ordinance paſſed for a voluntary Contribution to raiſe the ſecond Payment to the Scots.

The late Carriage of the Armies in ſuffering Donnington Caſtle to be relieved, and quitting Newbury which was plundered, and not fighting when the Parliament's Forces were two for one, was referred to a Committee to be examined. Miſcarriages.

The Parliament's Forces quartered at Reading, Abington and Henley, where the rude Soldiers did great miſchief to Friends as well as Enemies in their Houſes and more in their Woods; but ſuch inſolencies and miſchiefs muſt be expected from this brood of Men or rather bruiſh Soldiers, who know no difference between Friends and Foes, but all is Plunder that they can faſten their hands upon.

Kent raiſed 3000 men to oppoſe the King's march into Suſſex and Surrey, which was feared.

A Party of about 300 of the King's Forces coming to Axminſter near Lyme, to fortify it, and to ſtraiten Lyme, the Governor fell upon them, and at the ſecond Charge routed them, killed Major Walker, two Captains, two Lieutenants, and divers common Soldiers, took four Pieces of Ordnance, many Arms and Priſoners, and releaſed fifty Gentlemen who had been by them taken Priſoners from their Houſes.

The Commons paſſed the Directory of Worſhip.

Commiſſioners at Oxford. Letters from the Commiſſioners at Oxford informed, That on the Lord's day they preſented the Propoſitions for Peace to the King, which were read by the Earl of Denbigh. That the King ask'd the Committee if they had power to treat? they anſwered, no; but their Commiſſion was to receive His Majeſty's Anſwer in writing; then the King ſaid they ſhould receive his Anſwer accordingly.

At the reading of the excepted perſons names, which the Earl of Denbigh read with great courage and temper: P. Rupert and P. Maurice being preſent when their names were read as excepted perſons, they fell into a laughter, at which the King ſeemed diſpleaſed, and bid them be quiet,

When the Committee anſwered the King that they had no Commiſſion to treat, but to receive His Majeſty's Anſwer in writing, the King replied, then a Letter-carrier might have done as much as you; to which the Earl of Denbigh ſaid, I ſuppoſe your Majeſty looks upon us as perſons of another condition than Letter-carriers.

The King ſaid again, I know your condition; but I ſay that your Commiſſion gives you power to do no more than a Letter-carrier might have done, and ſo we came away from the King with a little kind of diſſatisfaction, but ſome of his Lords afterwards excuſed to us thoſe haſty words.

Surrey petitioned for relief againſt free Quarter, which was ordered, and that all Forces of the Parliament near London ſhould be removed nearer to the Enemy, and to enlarge their own Quarters.

Order was given for the relief of Taunton-Caſtle, and for Supplies of Abington.

Perſons in Norwich, who were impriſoned for not coming to hear Common Prayer, were by Vote diſcharged

An Ordinance paſſed for the inhabitants of New England to have free Trade hither without paying of Cuſtoms.

Two

Anno 1644. Two Papiſts being ſtayed at the Court of Guards, affirmed that they were Parliament Soldiers under Captain Buller, and the Houſe being informed of it, referred it to a Committee to be examined, and order if it were ſo and the Captain knew it, that he ſhould be caſhiered; and the like for any Officer of the Parliament that ſhould do as he did.

A new Seal was made of the Dutchy of Lancaſter, and I was made by the Parliament Attorney of the Dutchy.

The Commons referred it to the Committee of the Navy to take ſpecial notice of the gallant Service done by Captain Aſhley, and to give him all due Encouragement.

Sir John Boles with Forces from Newark, plundered divers Houſes in Lincolnſhire of the Parliament's Friends, and took away Mr. Anderſon, and Mr. Emmerſon a Committee-man, Priſoners.

City Petition. The City by a Petition remember their forwardneſs in their perſons and purſes to ſerve the Parliament, and deſire a reimburſement of their monies lent towards reducing of Newcaſtle, and that they might have Coals at a reaſonable price; which was held fit by the Commons, and put in a way to be done.

Monmouth Caſtle. A Party of Monmouth Garriſon being drawn out upon a deſign againſt the King's Forces thereabouts, the Lord Herbert of Ragland having notice thereof, ſent ſeven or eight of his Soldiers in the habit of Countrymen, who diſcourſed with the Sentinels of Monmouth Caſtle, feigning themſelves Friends, which made the Sentinels ſecure and careleſs; upon which two Troops of Horſe, watching their Opportunity broke through the Sentinels, and poſſeſt themſelves of the Caſtle.

A Ship of Exeter loaden with rich goods, and caſt by weather into Lyme, was ordered to be ſold; and one Moiety of the goods for the Town, the other for the ſervice of the Weſt.

Upon the Petition of divers Weſtern Gentlemen driven from their Habitations by the King's Forces, the Commons ordered a Committee to take care to provide Houſes and Accommodations for them; and this brought in divers others who were not in the like neceſſity, but rather for their gain to obtain the like favour.

Sir Thomas Littleton was remanded to ſtraiter cuſtody in the Tower.

Commiſſioners at Oxford. The Committee who carried the Propoſitions of Peace to Oxford, had the King's Anſwer ſealed up and ſent to them.

They upon advice together thought it not fit for them to receive an Anſwer in that manner, not being acquainted what it was, nor a Copy of it (as was uſual in the like caſes) ſent with it unto them, and upon this they deſired to be excuſed from receiving that Anſwer ſo ſealed, and made an Addreſs to His Majeſty, that they might know what his Anſwer was, and have a Copy of it; to which His Majeſty replied, What is that to you, who are but to carry what I ſend, and if I will ſend the Song of Robin Hood and Little John you muſt carry it? to which the Commiſſioners only ſaid, That the buſineſs about which they came and were to return with His Majeſty's Anſwer was of ſomewhat more conſequence than that Song. And other Paſſages there were which ſhewed the King to be then in no good humour, and were wondred at in a buſineſs eſpecially of this Importance, and where the diſobliging the Commiſſioners could be of no advantage to the King; but all was endeavoured to be made up again by ſome of the King's Lords before the Commiſſioners came away, and a Copy of the Anſwer was ſent them.

Another Exception they took to the Paper of the Anſwer, that it was not directed to any body, nor the Parliament ſo much as acknowledged, or named in it, to which the King anſwered, that it was delivered to the Parliament's Commiſſioners which was ſufficient; and ſome of his Lords told us, that they could not get it otherwiſe, chiefly, becauſe we were there as Commiſſioners of both Kingdoms, and earneſtly intreated us for peace ſake, to receive it as it then was ſent to us. 20 Car.

Upon Debate thereof among ourſelves, and it being conſidered that we muſt take it upon ourſelves to break off the Treaty for Peace in caſe we refuſed this Paper; and that it was more proper for us to leave it to the Judgment of our Maſters, we did receive the Anſwer as it was ſent to us.

Nov. 29. We returned to the Parliament, and the next day at a Conference of both Houſes His Majeſty's Anſwer was read, in the preamble whereof were high expreſſions of his deſires of Peace, and he demanded a Safe Conduct for the Duke of Lenox and the Earl of Southampton to come with his Anſwer to the Propoſitions. The King's Anſwer.

The Exceptions to this Paper of the King's were much debated, but at length out of the earneſt deſire of Peace, it was carried to lay aſide thoſe Objections.

And the Houſe ordered, That upon conſideration of the faithful ſervice done by the Committee that went to His Majeſty, and their diſcreet carriage of the buſineſs, the Thanks of the Houſe ſhould be returned to them for the ſame: and every one of them ſeverally in their order ſtood up in their places, and the Speaker ſolemnly pronounced the Thanks of the Houſe to them.

December, 1644. The Commons agreed upon ſeveral Gentlemen to be High Sheriffs, and thoſe who refuſed, or to act as Juſtices of the Peace, ſhould be ſent for as Delinquents.

The Earl of Mancheſter made a long Report touching the buſineſs of Donnington Caſtle, and in excuſe of the Parliament's Forces in that Action.

Abuſes were examined of the Gentleman whom ſome called Prince Griffith.

Sir J. Hotham was Tried by the Court Marſhal. Hotham.

1. For betraying his Truſt, and adhering to the Enemy, proved by his Words, Letters and Actions; his compliance with the Lord Digby, the Marquiſs of Newcaſtle, and others of that party.

2. His Refuſal to ſupply the Lord Fairfax with Ammunition, to the great prejudice of the Parliament.

3. His Scandalous Words againſt the Parliament.

4. His Endeavour to betray Hull to the Enemy.

Thirty Witneſſes were examined againſt him, and divers for him in his Defence.

The Parliament directed a Letter to be ſent from the Lord General to Prince Rupert to this effect. Letter to P. Rupert.

That if His Majeſty ſhall ſend to the Parliament of England aſſembled at Weſtminſter, and to the Commiſſioners of the Parliament of the Kingdom of Scotland, they would with all readineſs grant a Safe Conduct for the Duke of Richmond and the Earl of Southampton to come from the King with an Anſwer to the Propoſitions for Peace, and treat with them according to His Majeſty's deſire.

Several Ordinances paſſed for raiſing of Monies.

Abington being in ſome diſtreſs, Major General Crauford with a Party of the Parliament's Forces, relieved the Garriſon plentifully and brought thither 1000 Sheep, which he drove away from Anno 1644. under the Walls of Wallingford, and none of the Enemy appeared againſt him.

Sir Lewis Dives being at Dorcheſter with about 300 Horſe and Dragoons, ſent a Party to face Lyme, and at their return Major Sydenham of Pool with about 60 Horſe fell upon them in Dorcheſter, charged them through and through, wounded Dives, ſlew many and took divers Priſoners.

Sydenham. As Sydenham faced about he ſaw Major Williams (who had formerly killed the Mother of Sydenham) in the Head of the King's Troops coming to charge him, whereupon Sydenham bid his Men ſtand cloſe to him, for he would avenge his Mother's Blood on Williams, or die on the Place; and then ſo violently made his way that he came up to Williams and ſlew him, put all his Men to flight, and drove them through the Town, and ſo returned to Pool.

Carliſle Garriſon was reported to be in ſuch want that they eat their Horſes, they were ſo cloſely beſieged by the Parliament's Forces.

Captain Hains eſcaped from Impriſonment by the Enemy.

Cromwell. Colonel Cromwell being made Lieutenant General of the Earl of Mancheſter's Army, gave great ſatisfaction to the Commons touching the Buſineſs of Donnington Caſtle, and ſeemed (but cautiouſly enough) to lay more blame on the Officers of the Lord General's Army, than upon any other. And the point of Privilege was debated touching the Lords tranſmitting of a Charge from them before it was brought up to them.

This reflected upon Lieutenant General Cromwell, of whom the Lord General now began to Jealouſies. have ſome Jealouſies, and was adviſed to put to his Strength to rid Cromwell out of the way, and the means to be uſed to effect this was ſuppoſed to be by the Scots Commiſſioners, who were not well pleaſed with Cromwell upon ſome Words which he had ſpoken (as they apprehended) derogatory to the Honour of their Nation.

One Evening very late Maynard and I were ſent for by the Lord General to Eſſex-Houſe, and there was no Excuſe to be admitted, nor did we know beforehand the Occaſion of our being ſent for: Conference againſt Cromwell. when we came to Eſſex-Houſe, we were brought to the Lord General, and with him were the Scots Commiſſioners, Mr. Hollis, Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir John Meyrick and divers others of his ſpecial Friends.

After Compliments, and that all were ſet down in Council, the Lord General ſpake to us to this Effect.

L. Gen. Mr. Maynard and Mr. Whitelocke, I ſent for you upon a ſpecial Occaſion, to have your Advice and Counſel, and that in a Matter of very great Importance concerning both Kingdoms, in which, my Lords, the Commiſſioners of Scotland are concerned for their State, and we for ours; and they as well as we knowing your Abilities and Integrity, are very deſirous of your Counſel in this great Buſineſs.

Maynard. We are come to obey your Excellency's Commands, and ſhall be ready to give our faithful advice in what ſhall be required of us.

Wh. Your Excellency, I am aſſured, is fully ſatisfied of our affections and duty to your Self, and to that cauſe in which we are all engaged, and, my Lords, the Commiſſioners of Scotland will likewiſe, I hope, entertain no ill thoughts of us.

L. Gen. My Lord Chancellor of Scotland, and the reſt of the Commiſſioners of that Kingdom, deſired that you two by name might be conſulted with upon this occaſion, and ſhall deſire my Lord Chancellor who is a much better Orator than I am to acquaint you what the Buſineſs is. 20 Car.

L. Chancellor. Maſter Maynard and Maſter Whitelocke, I can aſſure you of the great Opinion both my Brethren and my ſelf have of your worth and Abilities, elſe we ſhould not have deſired this meeting with you, and ſince it is his Excellency's pleaſure that I ſhould acquaint you with the matter upon whilke your Counſel is deſired, I ſhall obey his commands, and briefly recite the Buſineſs to you.

You ken vary weele that Lieutenant General Cromwell is no Friend of ours, and ſince the advance of our Army into England, he hath uſed all underhand and cunning means to take off from our honour and merit of this Kingdom; an evil requital of all our hazards and ſervices: but ſo it is, and we are nevertheleſs fully ſatisfied of the Affections and Gratitude of the gude People of this Nation in the general.

It is thought requiſite for us, and for the carrying on of the Cauſe of the tway Kingdoms, that this obſtacle or remora may be removed out of the way, whom we foreſee will otherwiſe be no ſmall impediment to us, and the gude deſign we have undertaken.

He not only is no Friend to us, and to the Government of our Church, but he is alſo no Well-willer to his Excellency, whom you and we all have cauſe to love and honour; and if he be permitted to go on in his ways, it may, I fear, endanger the whole Buſineſs; therefore we are to adviſe of ſome courſe to be taken for prevention of that Miſchief.

You ken vary weele the accord 'twixt the twa Kingdoms, and the union by the ſolemn League and Covenant, and if any be an Incendiary between the twa Nations, how is he to be proceeded againſt: now the matter is, wherein we deſire your Opinions, what you tak the meaning of this word Incendiary to be, and whether Lieutenant General Cromwell be not ſike an Incendiary, as is meant thereby, and whilke way wud be beſt to tak to proceed againſt him, if he be proved to be ſike an Incendiary, and that will clepe his wings from ſoaring to the prejudice of our Cauſe.

Now you may ken that by our Law in Scotland we clepe him an Incendiary whay kindleth coals of Contention, and raiſeth differences in the State to the publick damage, and he is tanquam publicus hoſtis patriæ; whether your Law be the ſame or not, you ken beſt who are mickle Learned therein, and therefore with the favour of his Excellency we deſire your Judgments in theſe Points.

L. Gen. My Lord Chancellor hath opened the Buſineſs fully to you, and we all deſire your Opinions therein.

Wh. I ſee none of this honourable Company is pleaſed to diſcourſe farther on theſe Points, perhaps expecting ſomething to be ſaid by us, and therefore not to detain you longer, I ſhall, with ſubmiſſion to your Excellency, and to theſe honourable Commiſſioners of Scotland, declare humbly and freely my Opinion upon thoſe particulars, which have been ſo clearly propoſed and opened by my Lord Chancellor.

The ſenſe of the word Incendiary is the ſame with us as his Lordſhip hath expreſſed to be by the Law of Scotland, one that raiſeth the fire of Contention in a State, that kindles the burning hot Flames of Contention; and ſo it is taken in the accord of the two Kingdoms.

Whether Lieutenant General Cromwell, be ſuch an Incendiary between theſe two Kingdoms, as is meant by this word, cannot be known but by proofs of his particular Words or Actions, tending to the kindling of

of this fire of Contention betwixt the two Nations, and raiſing of differences between us.

If it do not appear by Proofs that he hath done this, then he is not an Incendiary; but if it can be made out by Proofs that he hath done this, then he is an Incendiary, and to be proceeded againſt for it by the Parliament upon his being there accuſed for thoſe things.

This I take for a Ground, that my Lord General, and my Lords the Commiſſioners of Scotland, being Perſons of ſo great Honour and Authority as you are, muſt not appear in any Buſineſs, eſpecially of an Accuſation, but ſuch as you ſhall ſee before-hand will be clearly made out, and be brought to the effect intended.

Otherwiſe for ſuch Perſons as you are to begin a Buſineſs of this weight, and not to have it ſo prepared before-hand as to be certain to carry it, but to put it to a doubtful Trial, in caſe it ſhould not ſucceed as you expect, but that you ſhould be foiled in it, it would reflect upon your great Honour and Wiſdom.

Next, as to the Perſon of him who is to be accuſed as an Incendiary, it will be fit in my humble Opinion, to conſider his preſent Condition, and Parts, and Intereſt, wherein Mr. Maynard and my ſelf by our conſtant attendance in the Houſe of Commons, are the more capable to give an Account to your Lordſhips, and for his Intereſt in the Army, ſome honourable Perſons here preſent his Excellency's Officers, are beſt able to inform your Lordſhips.

I take Lieutenant General Cromwell to be a Gentleman of quick and ſubtle Parts, and one who hath (eſpecially of late) gained no ſmall Intereſt in the Houſe of Commons, nor is he wanting of Friends in the Houſe of Peers, nor of Abilities in himſelf to manage his own Part or Defence to the beſt Advantage.

If this be ſo (my Lords) it will be the more requiſite to be well prepared againſt him before he be brought upon the Stage, leſt the Iſſue of the Buſineſs be not anſwerable to your Expectations.

I have not yet heard any particulars mentioned by his Excellency, nor by my Lord Chancellor, or any other; nor do I know any in my private Obſervations, which will amount to a clear Proof of ſuch matters as will ſatisfy the Houſe of Commons in the Caſe of Lieutenant General Cromwell, (and according to our Law, and the courſe of Proceedings in our Parliament) that he is an Incendiary, and to be puniſhed accordingly.

However, I apprehend it to be doubtful, and therefore cannot adviſe that at this time he ſhould be accuſed for an Incendiary, but rather that direction may be given to collect ſuch particular Paſſages relating to him, by which your Lordſhips may judge whether they will amount to prove him an Incendiary or not.

And this being done, that we may again wait on your Excellency if you pleaſe, and upon view of thoſe Proofs we ſhall be the better able to adviſe, and your Lordſhips to judge what will be fit to be done in this Matter.

Maynard. Your Excellency and my Lord Chancellor are pleaſed to require our advice in this great buſineſs, and we ſhall deal clearly and freely with your Lordſhips, which I think will be moſt acceptable to you, and will in concluſion be beſt for your ſervice.

Mr. Whitelocke hath begun thus, and in ſpeaking his own ſenſe hath ſpoken much of mine, and left me the leſs to ſay, and I ſhall follow him in the ſame plainneſs and method as he hath begun, which I preſume will be moſt pleaſing to your Lordſhips.

The word Incendiary is not much converſant in our Law, nor often met with in our Books, but more a term of the Civil Law or of State, and ſo to be conſidered in this Caſe, and to be taken according to the Expreſſion wherein it is uſed in the Accord of the two Kingdoms, and in the ſenſe of the Parliaments of both Nations. 20 Car.

That ſenſe of it which my Lord Chancellor hath been pleaſed to mention, it doth bear ex vi termini, and ſurely he that kindles the Coals of Contention between our Brethren of Scotland and us, is an Incendiary, and to be puniſhed as it is agreed on by both Kingdoms.

But, my Lords, as you have been told, there muſt be Proof made of ſuch particulars of Words or Actions, upon which there may be ſufficient ground for a Parliament to declare their Judgment, that he who uſed ſuch Words or Actions endeavoured thereby to raiſe differences, and to kindle the fire of Contention among us, and ſo that he is an Incendiary.

Lieutenant General Cromwell is a Perſon of great Favour and Intereſt with the Houſe of Commons, and with ſome of the Houſe of Peers likewiſe, and therefore there muſt be Proofs, and the more clear and evident againſt him to prevail with the Parliament to adjudge him to be an Incendiary.

I confeſs, my Lords, I do not in my private Knowledge aſſure my ſelf of any ſuch particulars, nor have we heard of any here, and I believe it will be more difficult than perhaps ſome of us may imagine to faſten this upon him.

And if it be difficult and doubtful, it is not fit for ſuch Perſons as my Lord General, and the Commiſſioners of the Kingdom of Scotland, as yet to appear in it, but rather firſt to ſee what Proofs may be had of particular Paſſages, which will amount to a clear Proof, upon which Judgment may be grounded that he is an Incendiary.

And when ſuch Pooofs ſhall be ready to be produced, we may again wait upon your Excellency, and the Buſineſs will then be the more ripe for your Lordſhips Reſolution; in the mean time my humble Opinion is that it may be deferred.

Mr. Hollis, and Sir Philip Stapleton, and ſome others, ſpake ſmartly to the Buſineſs, and mentioned ſome particular Paſſages, and words of Cromwell tending to prove him to be an Incendiary, and they did not apprehend his Intereſt in the Houſe of Commons to be ſo much as was ſuppoſed; and they would willingly have been upon the Accuſation of him.

But the Scots Commiſſioners were not ſo forward to adventure upon it, for the Reaſons (they ſaid did ſatisfy them) which were given by Mr. Maynard and me, until a farther Enquiry were made of particulars for Proof to make him an Incendiary, the which at length was generally conſented to, and about two a Clock in the Morning with Thanks and Compliments Mr. Maynard and I were diſmiſſed; and I had ſome cauſe to believe, that at this Debate, ſome who were preſent, were falſe Brethren, and informed Cromwell of all that paſt among us, and after that, Cromwell, though he took no notice of any particular Paſſages at that time, yet he ſeemed more kind to me and Mr. Maynard than he had been formerly, and carried on his Deſign more actively of making way for his own Advancement, as will appear in Progreſs of this enſuing Story.

The Lords ſent to the Commons that a ſpeedy Anſwer might be given to the Papers of the States Ambaſſadors, and for Audience to be given to the French Agent; and a Committee was named to conſider of the manner of his Reception.

A Report was made to the Houſe by their Command, of the particular Paſſages betwixt his Majeſty, and the Committee that carried the Propoſitions to him, which they had forborn before fore to mention, but the Houſe having an intimation thereof, ordered the particular Paſſages thereof to be Reported to them, which was done, as I have mentioned them before.

The Commons ordered 6000 l. for providing ſtore of Arms and Ammunition.

Higgins, the Lord General's Trumpeter returned from Oxford, where he ſaid he was more courteouſly uſed than before; and that the King commanded he ſhould be kindly uſed, and rewarded; and that he was not, as formerly hoodwink'd, when they brought him in.

Safe Conduct. Prince Rupert by the King's direction ſent a Letter to the General for a ſafe Conduct for the Duke of Richmond, and the Earl of Southampton, to bring unto the Parliament of England aſſembled at Weſtminſter, and the Commiſſioners of the Parliament of the Kingdom of Scotland an Anſwer of the Propoſitions, lately preſented to his Majeſty, for a ſafe and well grounded Peace.

Vote. The Commons voted that no Member of either Houſe of Parliament, ſhall, during this War, enjoy or execute any Office or Command Military Self-denying Ordinance. or Civil, and that an Ordinance be brought in accordingly.

This was moved by Mr. Zouch Tate who brought it in with a Similitude of a Boil upon his Thumb, and was ſet on by that Party who contrived the outing of the Lord General, and to bring on their own Deſigns; and they could find no other way, than by paſſing a Self-denying Ordinance (as they called it) which would ſerve their turn, both as a ſpecious Pretence of their own Integrity, and waving all ſelf-ends, and ſo plauſible to the People, and would alſo comprehend the Lord General with the reſt, and without naming of him, which for Shame and Ingratitude they could not think fit to be done.

Some of them confeſt, that this was their Deſign, and it was apparent in it ſelf, and the Reaſon of their doing this was to make way for others, and becauſe they were jealous that the Lord General was too much a favourer of Peace (a good fault in a General of an Army) and that he would be too ſtrong a Supporter of Monarchy, and of Nobility, and other old Conſtitutions, which they had a mind to alter; ſuch is the Ingratitude of People, and the Incertainty of their Favour, no Confidence can be placed therein for this gallant Man's ſake, who was a moſt faithful Servant to the Publick, and performed ſo many brave Services for them, to the utmoſt Hazards of his own Life, Honour and Fortune, and for all this had no other Recompence, but an unhandſome Affront by a ſide Wind, and cunning Contrivance of his Enemies to remove him from his Commands, ſo gallantly and ſucceſfully executed by him. 20 Car.

A ſafe Conduct was aſſented to, for the Duke of Richmond and the Earl of Southampton, and the Committee of both Kingdoms ordered to get the Concurrence of the Scots Commiſſioners, and to ſend it with expedition to the King.

Major Duett, with a Party of Colonel Ludlow's Regiment fell upon a Party of the King's Horſe near Salisbury, took Colonel Cooke, Lieutenant Colonel Hooker, divers inferior Officers, 40 Soldiers, 160 Horſe and Arms, and killed about 20 of them.

Sir John Hotham's Son Captain Hotham was tried before the Court Marſhal, for betraying a Regiment of Horſe of the Parliament's to the Enemy, and for Treachery, and betraying his Truſt in divers Particulars proved againſt him by his own Words, Letters and Actions, and many Witneſſes produced to make good the Charge.

Dutch Ambaſſadors. The States Ambaſſadors were received with great State and Honour by both Houſes; who thanked them for their Offer of a Mediation of Peace, and deſired the Continuance of Amity and Friendſhip, with the High and Mighty Lords the States, but in regard, Propoſitions for Peace were now on foot between his Majeſty and his Parliament, and the Scots Commiſſioners, nothing otherwiſe could be now done therein.

The Ambaſſadors replied in French, that they would return what they had received, to their Lords, and they deſired a farther Anſwer to their Propoſitions touching Free Trade.

When they were gone out of the Houſe, the Speaker deſired that ſome of the Members who underſtood the French Tongue better than he, might interpret to the Houſe the effect of the Ambaſſadors Speech in French, which uſually was done by Mr. Hollis, and he being now abſent, I was called up to do it; and thereupon the Houſe named a Committee to conſider of their Propoſitions for a Free Trade to the Ports of the Enemy.

An Ordinance paſt for Satisfaction to Waggoners, who loſt their Carriages in the late Fights.

The Earl of Northampton with 3000 Horſe much infeſted part of Bucks and Oxfordſhire; Order was taken for Money to pay the Forces of thoſe Counties to reſiſt him.

Somerſet-Houſe was ordered to be prepared for the King's Commiſſioners, and voted that no Member of either Houſe ſhould viſit or ſpeak with, or ſend or receive any Meſſage to or from thoſe that ſhould come from Oxford, unleſs they had leave for it.

The Self-denying Ordinance was read, and a Day of publick Faſt ordered.

Crowland was ſurrendred to the Parliament's Forces on Conditions, the Officers to march away with Swords and Piſtols, the Foot to leave behind them their Arms, Ordnance and Ammunition.

The Petition of divers Londoners was read, commending the Vote for the Self-denying Ordinance, and they again had the Thanks of the Houſe.

Colonel

Anno 1644. Colonel Maſſey fell upon a Party of the King's at Salisbury near Briſtol, took 120 Horſe, 100 Arms, 50 Priſoners, and 12 Officers.

Hotham. Captain Hotham made his defence before the Court-Marſhal, and juſtified Treaties with the Enemy, as a Commander for the ſervice of the Parliament, other Charges he denied, and excepted againſt ſome Witneſſes.

The Commons Ordered that none but Members of the Houſe ſhould come to the Church, where they kept the Faſt.

Faſt. The Lords reprieved Sir John Hotham for a few days, till he had better ſettled his Eſtate. Both Houſes kept the Faſt in Lincoln's-Inn Chapel, and none were to be preſent there but the Members only, and ſome ſaid that the Preachers deſired it might be ſo, that they might ſpeak the more freely to them, eſpecially upon the point of the Self-denying Ordinance.

Lords from Oxford. Both Houſes agreed to receive the Lords that were come from the King in the Painted Chamber, by a Committee of 14 Lords, and 28 Commoners, and they deſired from the Lords, a liſt of their Retinue, to the end no Affront might be offered to them.

Hereof they had not cauſe to complain, as the Parliament's Commiſſioners had at Oxford, for theſe Lords, and all their attendance were civilly treated by all ſort of perſons, and this Order for the Liſt was the rather made, to diſcover ſuch as came to Town with the Lords, under pretence of being of their Retinue, when they were not, but came to do ill offices to the Parliament.

Sir Symond D'ewes had an Order to preſent a Miniſter to a Living in his gift.

Order was taken for raiſing of Monies, for the Engliſh and Scots Armies in the North for certain Months.

L'Eſtrange. Mr. Roger L'Eſtrange was apprehended, for a deſign to betray Lynne in Norfolk to the King, and for that end had a Treaty with Captain Lemmon Lieutenant Governor there, who ſhewed a Compliance with L'Eſtrange, but acquainted Colonel Walton the Governor with all the paſſages, whereupon L'Eſtrange was ſeized upon; and with him was found a Commiſſion from the King, authorizing him for this ſervice, and engaging, That if the Town were gained, that L'Eſtrange ſhould be Governor of it, and have great preferment, and what Rewards he ſhould promiſe for effecting it, not exceeding 8000*l. ſhould be paid*, and divers other fair Promiſes made, and this was noted to be, when the Treaty for Peace was on foot.

Several Places to be betrayed.

The like Deſign was for betraying St. Nicholas Iſland by Plymouth, but prevented by the Lord Roberts the Governor; the like was for the betraying Stafford, prevented by Sir William Brereton; the like Deſign was for betraying of Reading, diſcovered by the apprehending of a Spy, who having lighted Matches put to his fingers, confeſſed all; and Alderman Harriſon, and his Complotters were ſeized upon.

The Self-denying Ordinance paſſed the Houſe of Commons, without excepting any Member.

Anſwer to the Propoſitions for Peace. The Committee of Lords and Commons received the King's Anſwer to the Propoſitions for Peace, wherein the Parliament and the Commiſſioners of Scotland were acknowledged, and the King deſired, That in regard of the great Alteration in Government both of Church and State, imported in the Propoſitions: That the ſame, and Reaſons for any Alteration, or Explanation of them, may be debated and weighed.

He therefore propoſeth, that the Parliament would appoint ſuch number of Perſons as they ſhould think fit, to treat with the like number of Perſons to be appointed by his Majeſty upon the ſaid Propoſitions; and ſuch other things as ſhall be propoſed by his Majeſty for preſervation and defence of the Proteſtant Religion, with due regard to tender Conſciences, the Rights of the Crown, the Liberty and Propriety of the Subject, and the Privilege of Parliament; and upon the whole matter to conclude an happy and bleſſed Peace. 20 Car.

Taunton Caſtle was relieved by Colonel Hepburne, and Major Van Ruſſe, and divers of the Beſiegers taken Priſoners.

The Proteſtant Forces and Subjects in Munſter petitioned the King's Commiſſioners againſt a further Ceſſation of Arms there, which was to be treated on by thoſe Commiſſioners with the Rebels.

Anſwer to the King's Meſſage. The two Houſes and the Scots Commiſſioners agreed upon an Anſwer to the King's Meſſage ſent by the Duke of Lenox and the Earl of Southampton, That they did conſent to a Treaty as was propoſed; but in regard there were many things which will take up ſome time for Preparation thereunto, both for the time and manner how to treat, they have ſent back his Majeſty's Meſſengers, and will return a ſpeedy Anſwer by Meſſengers of their own.

They held this way the fitter to be taken, becauſe thoſe two Lords and their Company were labouring and plotting whilſt they were here againſt the Intereſt of the Parliament; which was intimated to them by a Petition from the Common Council of the City.

Agent from Swedeland. An Agent of the Queen of Swedeland addreſſed himſelf to the Houſes by Letters from the Queen, acquainting them that he had Matters of great Importance to communicate to them from the Queen his Miſtreſs, and acknowledged the Parliament, and deſired Audience.

Self-denying Ordinance. The Self-denying Ordinance was again brought to the Houſe to be perfected, and a Clauſe offered to be added, That it ſhould not extend to any Lord Lieutenants, Deputy Lieutenants, Juſtices of Peace, or Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer, who were Members of either of the Houſes of Parliaments.

Upon this Debate many ſpake againſt the Ordinance, and among the reſt, I to this effect: Some of my Speeches are the rather inſerted, becauſe thereby the Debates will be more fully underſtood.

Mr. Speaker,

I am one of that number of your Servants, who have no Office or Employment, but ſuch as you are now about to except out of this Ordinance, nor have Ambition for any; and therefore may the more freely and indifferently, yet with all Submiſſion, humbly offer my Reaſons againſt it; as that which I apprehend may prove prejudicial to your Service.

It hath been objected, that your Houſe, and the Houſe of Lords is thin and empty, and you the leſs eſteemed, having ſo few Members here; many of them being employed in Offices, that they cannot attend the Houſes; but that by this Ordinance they will be at leiſure and liberty to attend the Service of the Parliament here, and the Houſes be much fuller than now they are.

I confeſs, Sir, this is fit to be remedied; but I apprehend you have a fitter way, than by this Ordinance to do it; that is, by iſſuing out new Writs for electing new Members in the places of thoſe who are dead, or expelled, and this will ſatisfy the Objection, and engage divers of Intereſt and Quality the more immediately in your Service: Whereas this Ordinance will diſcontent many, and the Houſes will be but little the fuller by the paſſing of it.

Another

Another Objection is, that if this Ordinance do not paſs, the Treaty for Peace will not ſo well proceed, and the particular Intereſts of Members of Parliament may retard the ſame; but will be all taken away by this Ordinance.

I am to ſeek how this can be materially objected, when I ſuppoſe whether this Ordinance paſs or not, yet you intend Members of Parliament only to be your Commiſſioners for that Treaty; and in caſe ſome of them be Officers, they will the better underſtand your Buſineſſes, on which the Treaty will be grounded.

Another Objection is, that unleſs this Ordinance paſs, the great Work intended of new modelling your Armies, will not ſo well be carried on, for that by putting all out, there will remain no exception.

I ſhould rather have argued, that by putting out all Members out of their Employment, the exception and diſcontent would be the more general; and by leaving them ſtill in their Employments, there would be the leſs Competition and Solicitation for new Officers in their rooms.

Another Objection or Argument is, that the Members of Parliament, who are Officers, being of equal Power in Parliament, will not be ſo obedient to your Commands, as others who have ſmaller Intereſts, and would not ſo much diſpute one with another.

Surely, Sir, thoſe whoſe Intereſt is the ſame with yours, have the more reaſon to obey your Commands than others, and have more to hazard by Diſobedience, than others can have; and in your Commands all your Members are involved, and it were ſtrange if they ſhould be backward to obey their own Orders.

Nor will the Conteſts be ſo frequent and high, between them and other Officers, as it will be between thoſe who will be of a more equal Condition.

But, Mr. Speaker, as you conſider the Inconveniencies if this Ordinance do not paſs, ſo you will be pleaſed to conſider the Inconveniencies if it do paſs.

You will lay aſide, as brave Men, and who have ſerved you with as much Courage, Wiſdom, Faithfulneſs, and Succeſs, as ever Men ſerved their Country.

Our noble General, the Earls of Denbigh, Warwick, Manchester; the Lords, Roberts, Willoughby, and other Lords in your Armies, beſides thoſe in civil Offices not excepted; and of your own Members the Lord Grey, Lord Fairfax, Sir William Waller, Lieutenant General Cromwel, Mr. Hollis, Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir William Brereton, Sir John Meyrick, and many others muſt be laid aſide, if you paſs this Ordinance.

And I am to ſeek, and I doubt ſo will they be to whom you ſhall refer the new modelling of your Armies; where to find Officers that ſhall excel, if equal theſe.

If your Judgments are, that for the publick Service it will be expedient to remove any of them from their Commands, let the ſame (if you pleaſe) be plainly made known to them from you.

Let them have what they deſerve, your Thanks for their former good Services, and they will not be offended, that you having no more Work for them, do lay them aſide with Honour.

But to do a Buſineſs of this nature (as hath been well ſaid) by a ſide Wind, is in my humble Opinion, not ſo becoming your Honour and Wiſdom, as Plainneſs and Gravity, which are Ornaments to your Actions.

I ſhall conclude with the Example of the Grecians and Romans, amongſt whom, Sir, you know, that the greateſt Offices both of War and Peace, were conferred upon their Senators; and their Reaſons were, becauſe they having greater Intereſts than others, were the more capable to do them the greateſt Service.

And having the ſame Intereſt with the Senate, and preſent at their Debates they underſtood their Buſineſs the better, and were leſs apt to break that Truſt, which ſo nearly concerned their private Intereſts, which was involved with the Publick; and the better they underſtood their Buſineſs, the better Service might be expected from them. 20 Car.

Sir, I humbly ſubmit the Application to your Judgment, your Anceſtors did the ſame; they thought the Members of Parliament fitteſt to be employed in the greateſt Offices: I hope you will be of the ſame Judgment, and not at this time to paſs this Ordinance, and thereby to diſcourage your faithful Servants.

The Debate held till it was late at Night, and then upon the Queſtion (as ſome called it) Envy and Self-ends prevailing, the Ordinance paſſed the Houſe of Commons, and was voted to be ſent up to the Lords for their Concurrence.

An Ordinance paſt for Obſervation of the Faſt-Day, eſpecially on the next Wedneſday, being Chriſtmas-Day.

The Petition of the Lord Carbury was referred to a Committee for his Relief.

Lords from the King.

The Parliament's Anſwer to the King's Meſſage being deliver'd to the Duke of Richmond, and Earl of Southampton, they ſaid, They had ſome further Matters from the King to impart to the two Houſes; and deſired to be heard of them: but the Committee anſwered, That they had not Power to receive any new Meſſage.

Then the Duke of Lenox demanded whether they might not deliver it to the Speakers of both Houſes; the Committee ſaid, That they could not give Advice therein. But this being reported to the Houſes, they order'd the Committee to receive from thoſe Lords what they had to offer further from the King.

I attended the Committee that gave Audience to the Agent from the Queen of Swedeland.

Mr. Pierpoint carry'd up to the Lords the Self-denying Ordinance.

The two Lords from the King delivered in a Paper to the Committee, declaring, The willingneſs of his Majeſty that no time ſhould be loſt in bringing on the Treaty, and to deſire that Commiſſioners might be then nominated: To which was returned, That they had already the Anſwer of both Houſes, and of the Scots Commiſſioners, which the Parliament deſired might be preſented to his Majeſty at Oxford.

The Lord Digby treated about ten Weeks together, by Meſſengers and Letters, with Major General Brown to betray Abingdon, making offers to him of great Preferment and Reward. The Major General wrote to a Friend about it, and deſired his Advice in it, who counſelled him to entertain the Treaty, to ſhew a Compliance with Digby, and to give fair Hopes of effecting what he deſired, and in the mean time to get the Works about the Town finiſhed.

This was agreeable to the Opinion of the Major General, and he had begun the Treaty with the Lord Digby, and carry'd it along with great hopes to the Lord, to have the Town ſurrendred, and that his Wit and Eloquence had prevailed with the Woodmonger, as he ſtiled him.

Brown gave an Account of all the Letters and Paſſages from time to time between them; and he was encouraged to carry on the Deſign, even to the Appointment of a day for Payment of Money to him; and for his Rendition of the Town to Digby, and even to the Permiſſion of part of the King's Forces to enter the Town, and then to fall upon them.

But

Anno 1644. But Brown thought it not good to proceed ſo far; but after ſo much time ſpent in Treaty and Expectation, Digby required the Town to be rendred by a poſitive Day, but Brown having well finiſhed his Works, gave his Lordſhip a poſitive Denial, which much enraged him.

Diſſenters. The Reaſons of the diſſenting Brethren to the Directory of the Church-Government by Presbyters, with the Anſwers to thoſe Reaſons, were preſented to the Houſe, and a Day appointed for the Debate of them.

An Ordinance paſs'd for Sir Thomas Allen's Compoſition for Delinquency.

Knasborough was ſurrendred to the Parliament upon Conditions, and there were taken four Pieces of Ordnance, ſtore of Arms, Money, and 1500 l. worth of Plate.

Letters from the Committee of Kent informed, That the King had lately ſent three Commiſſions into Kent, one for the betraying of Dover-Caſtle, another for Chatham, and ſome Ships, and the third to array Men in the Weſt of Kent. All which were diſcovered, and the Execution of them prevented; one of the Commiſſions was dated when the Committee were at Oxford, with Propoſitions for Peace.

Captain Redman with a Party from Northampton ſet upon a Party of the King's Forces going to Banbury, took Priſoners the L. St. Paul a Frenchman, Sir John Fenwicke, two of the Stricklands, fifteen others, thirty Horſe and Arms, and a Sumpter with rich Cloths.

Colonel Thorney with a Party from Nottingham took in a Garriſon of the King's near Newark, and in it the Maſter of the Houſe Sir Roger Cooper and his Brother, and fifty others Priſoners with their Arms.

Sir A. Carew. Decemb. 23. Sir Alexander Carew by Sentence of the Court-Marſhal was beheaded.

The Commons voted to refer the Conſideration of the manner of the Treaty upon the Propoſitions for Peace to the Committee of both Kingdoms, but the Lords were for a new Committee for it.

The Court-Marſhal pronounced Sentence of Death againſt Captain Hotham.

Laud. The Lords having voted the Archbiſhop guilty of the Matters charged againſt him for Matter of Fact, deſired Satisfaction from the Commons in point of Law, that thoſe Matters were Treaſon.

The Commons ordered the Removal of their Forces from the Counties near London, near to the Enemy to ſtraiten them, and to be in readineſs to attend their Motions.

Taunton. Letters from Sir Anthony Aſhley Cooper, informed of the Relief of Taunton Town and Caſtle, held out to admiration, by Colonel Blake, notwithſtanding his great want of Ammunition and Proviſions, and that the Works there were inconſiderable.

Colonel Edward Windham ſent a threatning Summons to Blake to render the Town and Caſtle, upon Pain of Fire and Sword, and perſuaded the doing of it, becauſe of the indefenſibleneſs of the Place, and to prevent the Effuſion of more Chriſtian Blood.

Blake returned this Anſwer; "Theſe are to "let you know, that as we neither fear your "Menaces, nor accept your Proffers, ſo we wiſh "you for time to come to deſiſt from all Over-"tures of the like nature unto us, who are reſol-"ved to the laſt drop of our Blood to maintain "the Quarrel we have undertaken; and doubt "not but the ſame God who hath hitherto pro-"tected us, will ere long bleſs us with an Iſſue "anſwerable to the Juſtneſs of our Cauſe; how-"ſoever to him alone ſhall we ſtand or fall.

Anno 1644. The like from Suſſex and Bucks, and complaining of the raviſhing of Women, and murthering of Men, to redreſs which Evils a Committee was appointed to conſider.

Theſe were the Fruits of Civil War, Robberies, Raviſhings, and innumerable wicked Actions, committed by the barbarous Soldiers, to the unſpeakable Miſery of the poor Country.

The Commons farther debated upon the Ordinance for the new Model of the Army, and for the Aſſeſsment for their Pay, and ordered the Members of each County to bring in Names of Commiſſioners for the Aſſeſſment in every County.

About 1100 of the King's Horſe and Foot iſſued out of Cheſter, and fell upon Sir William Brereton's Quarters, and to relieve Beeſton-Caſtle, cloſely beBrereton. ſieged by Brereton; who hearing of the Enemies coming, drew out a Party to encounter them: They placed their Ambuſcadoes, which the Parliament's Forces brake through, and routed the Enemy.

They took of them Priſoners, Colonel Worden, Colonel Ware, divers other Officers, 200 common Soldiers, as many Horſe and Arms, and killed and wounded a great number of them: This Party of the Parliament was commanded, the Horſe by Lieutenant Colonel Jones, and the Foot by Major Louthian.

News was brought that a Merchant's Ship from London, bound for the Eaſt-Indies, revolted to the King, and went to Briſtol, having in her 28 Pieces of Ordnance, and above 30000 l. in Goods.

A Party of the King's Forces from Newark, came forth to gather Contribution, and took Priſoners ſome Countrymen that were in Arrear: The Committee of Nottingham having notice thereof, ſent forth a Party, who purſuing thoſe of Newark, they left their Priſoners, and five or ſix of their Men behind, and haſtened to their Quarters.

Nottingham Men followed them cloſe, and ſo far that another Party of the Newark Forces came forth upon them, routed them, recovered their Priſoners, and took of the Parliament's Party Major Meldrum, Lieutenant Smith, and about 28 Soldiers, with their Arms and Horſes.

Titles. The Commons reſumed the Debate about the new Titles of the King's Commiſſioners, in the ſafe Conduct for them, and at laſt it was agreed, That the new made Knights ſhould have that Title given them, becauſe it was not a Title under the Great Seal.

And for the new made Earl, and the two new Lords, their new Titles were not given them in the ſafe Conduct becauſe they were granted by the King, after the Great Seal was carried away from the Parliament, and ſo Sir Peter Killegrew was ſent away towards Oxford, with the ſafe Conduct thus corrected.

The Commons were moved for the Exchange of the Lord Brereton for Sir John Northcot; but they denied it till his Lordſhip ſhould declare the Buſineſs of the killing of divers of the Parliament's Friends in cold Blood at Nantwich.

The City petitioned the Supply of Plymouth, which had been two Years beſieged, and concerning matters of Trade, and had thanks for their care.

The Commons finiſhed the Ordinance for the new Model of the Armies, and paſt ſeveral Votes concerning Church Government.

Sir Peter Killegrew who went to Oxford on Saturday, returned on Monday with the King's Anſwer, That he waved the Matters of Honour, and was content that his Commiſſioners ſhould treat under thoſe Titles that were admitted by the Parliament.

A Complaint was made againſt Colonel Harvey by ſeveral Petitions, particularly by Mr. Squire concerning 3000 l. taken from him by the Colonel, or ſome of his Officers, which was referred to a Committee to be examined. 20 Car.

Divers Compoſitions of Delinquents were allowed.

The Ordinance for raiſing and maintaining Forces under the command of Sir Thomas Fairfax, was ſent up to the Lords.

An Ordinance was read for enabling the Scots to march Southwards.

Sir Charles Sherley and Mr. Devereux were ſent for as Delinquents, for ſending a Challenge to a Member of the Houſe of Commons, who was alſo ſent for.

Both Houſes agreed that the three firſt Days of the Treaty ſhould be for Religion, the three next Treaty. for the Militia, and another three Days for Ireland, and ſo alternis vicibus, and ſent theſe Votes to the Committee of both Kingdoms for the Concurrence of the Scots Commiſſioners, who deſired ſome Alterations; upon which the Commons debated till ten at night, and then adjourned the Debate till the next morning, though it were the Faſt Day.

Colonel Crauford going from Aylesbury with about 80 Horſe to ſeek Quarters, met with about C. Crauford. 120 of the King's Men under Colonel Blake, Governor of Wallingford; and after a hot Diſpute between them, he routed Blake, whom Crauford wounded in a ſingle Charge between them two.

Blake eſcaped by the Goodneſs of his Horſe, all his Men except 14 were killed and taken, and ſome few deſperately wounded, and Crauford loſt but three Men, and ſome wounded.

News came from the Weſt, that Greenville, in diſcontent, had piſtolled Colonel Champernoun and his Brother.

The Commons ſat all the Faſt Day about the Buſineſs of the Treaty, the Lords ſat in the After- Treaty. noon, and at length all was agreed with the Scots Commiſſioners, that the Treaty is to be upon the three Propoſitions in order, three Days upon each, and to begin with Religion.

And now ſome began to obſerve the Difficulty, Difficulties if not Inconvenience, of carrying on their Affairs with a Concurrence of Commiſſioners of another Kingdom, whereupon grew Delays and Difference of Opinions, and not overmuch Inclination to ſubmit to Reaſon, more than to Will.

Letters from Colonel Jephſon informed, that Goring's Forces had much endeavoured, and offered great Rewards for the betraying of Portſea-bridge; and ſome who complied with him were apprehended: That Goring was in Normandy beating up Drums for Soldiers to come for England.

A Party of Goring's Forces fell upon the Quarters of ſome of the Parliament's Forces near Farnham, took forty Priſoners, two Colours, killed five or ſix of their Foot, burnt a Barn full of Corn, four Houſes, and ſet Fire on ſeveral Parts of the Town.

The Commons ordered Sir William Waller into the Weſt to prevent theſe Miſchiefs.

The Covenant was ordered to be read in the Churches every Faſt-day.

The Commons ordered a Letter for the ſpeedy bringing up of the Scotiſh Army, but many were Scots. not ſatisfied therewith.

A Party of the King's from Dunnington and Bazing, going to join with the Lord Hopton, by the way plundered the Country, and ſurprized the Weſt-country Carriers. Colonel Devereux with a Party from Marlborough fell upon them, took Priſoners Sir Anthony Saint Leger their Commander in chief, Major Hyde, divers other Officers, 30 Troopers, Anno 1644. 30 Troopers, 50 Horſe and Arms, and reſcued the Plunder.

Colonel Lucas was put out by the King from being Governor of Belvoir Caſtle, and Sir Guy Palms put in his Place: and Sir John Biron was removed from being Governor of Newark upon jealouſy, that he held Correſpondence with ſome of the Parliament's Party.

The King's Garriſon in Latham-Houſe (as was informed) contrary to an Agreement and Ceſſation of Arms, ſallied out, and did much miſchief to the Parliament's Friends.

Jan. 29. The Commiſſioners for the Treaty on both parts met at Uxbridge, and had their ſeveral Quarters; thoſe for the Parliament and all their Retinue on the North ſide of the Town, and thoſe for the King on the South ſide, and no intermixture of the one Party of their Attendants with the other: the beſt Inn of the one ſide was the Rendezvous of the Parliament's Commiſſioners, and the beſt Inn of the other ſide of the Street was for the King's Commiſſioners. Uxbridge.

The Evening that we came to Town ſeveral Viſits paſſed between particular Commiſſioners of either Party; as Sir Edward Hyde came to viſit Mr. Hollis and me, the Lord Culpepper viſited Sir Henry Vane, and others of the King's Commiſſioners viſited ſeveral of the Parliament's Commiſſioners, and had long Diſcourſes about the Treaty, and to perſuade one another to a compliance.

I viſited Sir Edward Hyde, and Mr. Palmer, and Sir Richard Lane, and others, and ſeveral of the Parliament's Commiſſioners viſited divers of the King's Commiſſioners, and had Diſcourſes with them tending to the furtherance of the Buſineſs of the Treaty.

The Town was ſo exceeding full of Company, that it was hard to get any Quarter except for the Commiſſioners and their Retinue; and ſome of the Commiſſioners were forced to lie two of them in a Chamber together in Field Beds, only upon a Quilt, in that cold Weather not coming into a Bed during all the Treaty.

This Place being within the Parliament's Quarters, their Commiſſioners were the more Civil, and deſirous to afford Accommodations to the King's Commiſſioners, and they thought it fit to appoint Sir John Bennet's Houſe at the farther end of the Town to be fitted for the Place of meeting for the Treaty.

The foreway into the Houſe was appointed for the King's Commiſſioners to come in at, and the backway for the Parliament's Commiſſioners; in the middle of the Houſe was a fair great Chamber, where they cauſed a large Table to be made, like that heretofore in the Star-Chamber, almoſt ſquare, without any upper or lower end of it.

The King's Commiſſioners had one end, and one ſide of the Table for them; the other end and ſide was for the Parliament's Commiſſioners, and the end appointed for the Scots Commiſſioners to ſit by themſelves. Behind the Chairs of the Commiſſioners on both ſides ſat the Divines and Secretaries, and ſuch of the Commiſſioners, as had not room to ſit next to the Table.

At each end of the great Chamber was a fair withdrawing Room, and Inner-Chamber, one for the King's, the other for the Parliament's Commiſſioners, to retire unto, and conſult when they pleaſed.

Precedence. The firſt Night of our being together, a little before Supper, an intimation was given that the Chancellor of Scotland expected both at the Table and Meetings to have Precedence of all the Engliſh Lords, and that Mr. Barkley and Mr. Kennedagh expected to have Precedence of the Engliſh Commiſſioners, who were but Eſquires, except Mr. St. John, to whom they were pleaſed to allow Precedence, becauſe he was the King's Solicitor. 20 Car.

Upon Diſcourſe, the Arguments they inſiſted upon for the Chancellor, were, That he was the prime Officer of Scotland, and had Precedence of all Dukes there, unleſs they were of the Blood Royal; and both the Kingdoms being now united, he was to have the ſame Precedence in England as he had in Scotland.

To which was anſwered, That he was not Chancellor in England, nor had any Precedence here, but in courteſy, as Earl of Loudon; that formerly when the great Officers of England attended the King into Scotland, as ſoon as they came thither, they ceaſed to execute their Offices, and had no Precedence there; and that it ought to be alike with the Chancellor of Scotland when he was here.

For the Precedence of Mr. Kennedah and Mr. Barkley before the Commiſſioners who were Eſquires, they were informed, that I and Mr. Crew were eldeſt Sons of Knights, and that by the Law of England thoſe were to have Precedence next to Knights, and conſequently before the Scotiſh Gentlemen, with which they were ſatisfied, but ſtill they inſiſted upon the point of the Chancellor's Precedence.

The Earl of Northumberland ſmiled at this Conteſt, and ſeemed to contemn it, of whoſe great Honour and Family, and the Antiquity of it the Scots Commiſſioners could not be ignorant, nor of the difference between that, and the Family of the Earl of Loudon.

Yet Northumberland moved for ſatisfaction of the Scots, that the Chancellor and one other of the Scots Commiſſioners might ſit at the upper end of the Table (which was not taken for the Chief, but for the Womens Place) and the reſt of the Commiſſioners to ſit in their Ranks, on either ſide; and ſo that Matter was for the preſent ſettled.

Officers had been ſent down from the Parliament to prepare all things fit for the Commiſſioners, and for their Diet and Entertainment, at which the Scots Commiſſioners were contented to have their ſhare; and things were ordered very nobly and handſomly.

Mr. Thurloe and Mr. Earle were Secretaries for the Engliſh, and Mr. Cheeſely for the Scots Commiſſioners: none ſat at the Table with the Commiſſioners but the Miniſters when there was room; and ſometimes Strangers, or Perſons of Quality, that came into us, and a very full Table was there kept for us; and always before every Meal, one of the Miniſters, Mr. Marſhal or Mr. Vines, and now and then Mr. Henderſon prayed, and ſuitable to the Occaſion.

On the firſt Day of our Meeting, Jan. 30, in the Evening, before we entred upon the Treaty, each ſide deſired to know the others Power for the Treaty, and to have Copies thereof.

A Petition from Kent preſented by their Committee, expreſs their good Affection to the Parliament, and encourage the Commons to purſue the Self-denying Ordinance, and the Thanks of the Houſe was returned them. Petition.

The King's Forces advancing towards Newport Paganel, Sir Samuel Luke the Governor, was ſent down thither.

Divers Orders were made for Supplies for the ſeveral Forces.

The

Anno 1644. The Members of the Houſe attended the Burial of Mr. John White of the Middle Temple, a Member of the Houſe of Commons, a Puritan from his Youth to his Death, an honeſt, learned and faithful Servant to the Publick, but ſomewhat ſevere at the Committee for plundered Miniſters.

Mr. White.

The Lords read the Bill or Ordinance for raiſing Forces under Sir Thomas Fairfax; and the Commons ordered a Letter to be ſent to him, for his ſpeedy coming up to the Parliament: and whilſt the Treaty for Peace went on, they did not ſlacken their Pains to prepare for War, in caſe the Treaty ſhould take no Effect.

For the motion of the Scots Army Southwards, Letters were paſt by the Commons, and ſent up to the Lords.

Treaty. Jan. 31. The Commiſſioners for the Treaty having viewed, and conſidered each others Powers and Inſtructions, Exceptions were taken on both Sides to the meaning of ſome Clauſes in their Inſtructions.

Both Houſes explained their meaning in thoſe Clauſes excepted againſt, and the King's Commiſſioners ſent to Oxford for Satisfaction, to that which was excepted againſt by the Commiſſioners of both Kingdoms.

They agreed to give in to each other Papers in writing of their particular Propoſals, and then as there ſhould be occaſion, to have verbal Debates upon any of thoſe Particulars, and accordingly the Parliament's Commiſſioners delivered in Papers to the King's Commiſſioners of four particulars concerning Religion, firſt to be treated on.

The Directory for Worſhip.

The taking away the Book of Common Prayer.

The Confirming of the Aſſembly of Divines.

Feb. 1644.

1. Before the Commiſſioners on either part for the Treaty inſiſted on any Debate, upon particulars; ſeveral Reſolutions were made by conſent of both Sides to this Effect.

That all overtures of the Treaty ſhould be ſet down in writing.

That whatſoever ſhould be agreed to on both Sides, upon any one or more of the Propoſitions, ſhould be null, and of no force, in caſe the Treaty break off upon any of the Propoſitions.

The Parliament's Commiſſioners delivered to the King's Commiſſioners, in writing the Propoſitions and Votes of both Houſes concerning the ſettling of Religion in a Presbyterial way, which were appointed for the Debate of the three firſt Days of the Treaty.

Unto theſe the King's Commiſſioners did make ſome Queries, as,

Queries. 1. What was meant by the Presbyterial Government propounded to be Eſtabliſhed.

2. What was meant by Claſſes.

3. What was meant by Provincial, and Synodical Aſſemblies.

4. What by the bounds of Pariſhes, with other Queſtions depending upon theſe.

Upon the entrance into the Debate of the Points, Doctor Steward ſpake very learnedly (though ſeeming frowardly) againſt Presbyterial Government in the Church of England; which had ſo long been under Epiſcopacy, which he thought moſt ſuitable to our Church, and to be Jure Divino. 20 Car. Dr. Steward.

Mr. Henderſon and Mr. Marſhal anſwered the Doctor, commending the Presbyterian way of Government; and that Epiſcopacy was not ſo ſuitable to the word of God, as Presbytery, which they argued to be Jure Divino. Jure Divino.

To which the Marquiſs Hertford ſpake to this Effect.

My Lords: Here is much ſaid concerning Church Government in the General, the Reverend Doctors on the King's part, affirm that Epiſcopacy is Jure Divino; the Reverend Miniſters of the other part do affirm that Presbytery is Jure Divino, for my part, I think that neither the one nor the other, nor any Government whatſoever is Jure Divino, and I deſire we may leave this Argument, and proceed to Debate upon the particular Propoſals. Marquiſs Hertford's Speech.

The Earl of Pembroke was of the ſame judgment, and many of the Commiſſioners beſides theſe two Lords, were willing to paſs over this Point, and to come to the Particulars.

Dr. Steward thought the Diſputes to be too various, and general, and deſired that they might diſpute Syllogiſtically, as became Scholars, which was the beſt way to find out the Truth.

Mr. Henderſon told them, that he, in his younger days had been a Pedagogue, and had alſo read Logick, and Rhetorick to his Scholars, and had wholly of late declined that kind of Learning; but hoped, he had not forgot all of it, and therefore agreed to diſpute Syllogiſtically.

In that way they proceeded upon the Points urged by the King's Doctors, which were very clearly and learnedly opened by Mr. Vines, Mr. Marſhal, and Mr. Henderſon, and very learnedly replied unto by all the King's Doctors, who did ſeverally declare their judgments upon thoſe Points, but the Arguments on both parts were too large to admit a place in this Story for them.

The King's Commiſſioners complained of a Sermon preached by Mr. Love at Uxbridge, the Morning before they entred upon the Treaty; wherein they ſaid were many Expreſſions in derogation of his Majeſty, and the preſent Treaty; the Parliament having notice thereof from their Commiſſioners, ſent for Love, and referred the Buſineſs to an examination. Love's Sermon.

The Commons paſſed an Ordinance for Tunnage and Poundage.

2. Mr. Marſhal preached this Sunday to the Parliament's Commiſſioners.

3. The Commons denied an exchange for Colonel Smith, once a Member of theirs, becauſe he being a Priſoner of War, eſcaped, and was retaken; and becauſe they were informed, that he ſaid, The only way to make the King's Forces ſucceſsfull, was to kill all the Ploughmen they met with, that the People might be deterred from ploughing their Grounds, and ſo ſtarve the Roundheads.

Letters from Major Purefoy Governor of Compton-Houſe, informed, that about 1200 of the King's Forces, about two a Clock at Night, fell upon him, and ſtormed his Outworks, and cut down the great Drawbridge, poſſeſt themſelves of all Purefoy's Troop-horſes, and took about 30 of his Foot Soldiers in their Beds, they, taking the Purefoy.

Anno 1644. the Alarm, made good a new Sconce, and beat the Enemy out of the Court, where, about 200 of them were entred, and ready to ſtorm the Sconce.

They were forced to retreat, and by a Party of the Garriſon of, about 40, fought at puſh of Pike, and Swords point, till Sir William and Sir Charles Compton gave Ground; which Purefoy's Soldiers perceiving, leaped out at the Windows, and recovered the Outworks, and the Drawbridge, and drew it up again, and ſo got them in a Pound.

The Comptons valiantly fought to ſtorm again the Outworks three times, and were as valiantly beaten back, after three Hours fight, they ſet on Fire the Hay, Straw, and combuſtible Stuff, which much annoyed Purefoy's Men, and they threw above 100 hand Granadoes, which ſet Fire on the Houſe in ſeveral places.

Then the Comptons ſent a Trumpet to Parley, but Purefoy forbad him ſpeaking to the Soldiers, and ſent him away.

The Fight continued, and the Fire increaſed, Purefoy drew all his Men together, and fell upon the Enemy, and killed, and took many of them, upon which the Comptons drew off their Foot, and faced the Houſe with their Horſe, and ſent another Trumpet to Parley, who was anſwered only with the ſhot of a Musket.

Of Compton's Men, about 20 Officers were killed, and taken, 6 Cart loads of wounded men carried off, and about 40 Common Soldiers left dead behind, and many more taken Priſoners, and great ſtore of Arms, and Purefoy writes that he had but two Men wounded.

Northampton Horſe the next Night fell upon the ſame Party of the King's near Banbury, and took 60 Horſe and 30 Priſoners.

Treaty. The King's Commiſſioners having received Anſwers to all their Queries touching Presbyterian Government, it was deſired by the Parliament's Commiſſioners, That they would declare their reſolutions therein, Poſitively, or Negatively, but anſwer was returned, that they could not untill they had made a farther progreſs in the other Propoſitions.

Thereupon the Parliament's Commiſſioners delivered in to them, ſeveral Papers, to treat on the Buſineſs of the Militia, which was appointed to be debated, the next Day in the Morning.

Militia. 4. The Commiſſioners being met, Sir Edward Hyde in the firſt place would have had it for granted that the whole power of the Militia by the Law of England is in the King only.

This by me was denied to be ſo very clear: and I undertook to make it out that our Law doth not poſitively affirm where that great Power is lodged, and doubted not but to ſatisfy the Commiſſioners fully in that Point. Whereupon it was moved that a Day might be appointed to hear their Arguments; when the Earl of Southampton interpoſed ſaying.

My Lords, We have already ſpent much time in Debates touching the matters of Religion; and although I ſhould be very glad to hear both theſe worthy Gentlemen ſpeak to this Point, by whom we may receive much ſatisfaction therein; yet I think that it will more conduce to the ſettling of our Buſineſs, to decline any Debate upon this Matter, and to ſee how far we can meet one another in the compoſure of the Buſineſs upon this Propoſition.

Hollis, My Lords, I think it is very well moved by that Noble Lord, for ſaving of our Time; and more for endeavouring to compoſe any Difference, that may be upon this Propoſition, by coming as near as we can to ſatisfy one another, and therefore, though I ſhould account the time very well ſpent to hear theſe worthy Gentlemen, who, I believe, would very much enlighten our Judgments in this Matter; yet I doubt it may not tend ſo much to a compoſure of it, as may be by declining the Debate. 20 Car.

Several others of the Commiſſioners ſpake to the ſame Effect with the Earl of Southampton, and Mr. Hollis; and thereupon it was thought fit to lay aſide the Debate between Sir Edward Hyde, and me: and the Commiſſioners proceeded in the Treaty upon the Particulars of the Propoſitions of the Militia.

The Commiſſioners of both Kingdoms, at their return to their Quarters, gave me Thanks for encountring Sir Edward Hyde upon the Point of Right of the Militia, wherein he was ſo confident, and ſaid the Honour of the Parliament was concerned therein, and vindicated by me.

Aſſembly. The Aſſembly ſent to the Commons a farther part of the Directory for Government of the Church in a Presbyterial way, as to the point of Excommunication, and that ſome of them diſſented in that Point.

Army. The Lords agreed to the Ordinance for the new Model of the Army under Sir Thomas Fairfax, with ſome Alterations and Additions, That the Officers ſhould be named by both Houſes; That all the Officers and Soldiers ſhall take the Covenant, and ſubmit to the Church Government agreed on by the Houſes; and that every Lord Lieutenant be of the Committee of that County for this Ordinance.

Many Orders about the Scots Army moving Southwards, and for Supplies for them, and for an Eſtabliſhment for the Garriſon of Portſmouth.

Malton. Captain Hacker going to fortify Sir Eraſmus de la Fountain's Houſe near Malton, a Party of the King's came upon them, but were repulſed; and during the Fight, ſome of Hacker's Men running into the Houſe for Powder, ſet two Barrels on fire, which blew up part of the Houſe, but withal diſcovered Plate and Jewels to the value of 600*l.* that were hid there by the Enemy

Colonel Haſtings for the King ſent out Warrants, for Carriages to fetch Hay to Aſhby; the Parliament's Forces ſent out their Warrants to bring the Hay to Coleorton; but Haſtings was too quick, and had compelled the Country to load the Hay, and with a ſtrong Guard was bringing of it to his Garriſon.

Captain Temple the High Sheriff of the County, having Notice thereof, with his Troop got between them and Aſhby in the Van, and three Troops of Derby following in the Rear; after a little Engagement, Haſtings's Men fled, and were routed and purſued, 40 of them taken Priſoners, 60 Horſe, Arms, and all their Hay.

5. Debate about the Ordinance for the new Model, and Orders concerning Muſters, and Pay of the Army and about the Navy, and for Guards of the Fiſhermen.

A Committee of both Houſes to conſider of ſundry Letters, and Papers concerning the County of Leiceſter.

Letters from Captain Cranley from Portſmouth informed, that the Lord Brabſon, Sir Henry Tichburne, Sir James Hare, and the reſt of the King's Commiſſioners for the Iriſh Buſineſs, lately taken at Sea, had Letters and Papers taken about them, of great Conſequence, which with the Priſoners were ſent up to the Parliament, who referred the Buſineſs to the Committee of both Kingdoms to be examined.

Peerage. The Point of Peerage in the Trial of the Lord Macquire was argued in the King's Bench, and the Opinion of the Court was, That he ſhould be tried there by an ordinary Jury.

The King's Commiſſioners at Uxbridge kept a ſolemn Faſt, and the like was in all the King's Quarters for the good Succeſs of the Treaty, and in the Evening they deliver'd a Paper to the Parliament's Commiſſioners, that the next Day they would give their Anſwer touching the Militia.

6. The Debate touching Excommunication put off.

Report of the Bill for taking away of Biſhops, and thoſe of Ireland added to be aboliſhed, and ſeveral Votes concerning Church Government, ſent up to the Lords.

Some new Sheriffs appointed.

Orders for Supplies for Abington.

Cardigan Caſtle.

Colonel Gerard beſieged Cardigan Caſtle kept by Lieutenant Colonel Poole, and by ſtratagem got into the Town, and cut down the Bridge to prevent Relief coming to the Caſtle, where they wanted Proviſions.

Gerard ſent a Summons to the Caſtle, that if they did not ſurrender by a day, they ſhould have no quarter. Poole and his Men returned Anſwer, that they had divers raw hides, which when they wanted proviſions, they would firſt eat, and when they were ſpent, then they would come out and fight for their lives, but would not ſurrender the Caſtle.

In the mean time Poole ſent to Major Laughorne for relief, who came with a ſtrong Party, and finding the Bridge broken down, he by faggots and pieces of wood, got his Men over the River, and ſent an Arrow into the Caſtle with a Letter to give them notice of his coming, and that they ſhould ſalley out upon the Enemy, the ſame time that he fell on.

All which was performed ſo ſucceſsfully, that Gerard's Forces were all routed, 200 of them ſlain upon the place, 4 braſs Pieces of Ordnance, 600 Arms, and 150 Priſoners taken, whereof Major Slaughter, divers inferior Officers, and Dr. Taylor.

Militia.

The King's Commiſſioners gave in their Anſwer about the Militia, wherein they agree to ſettle the Militia for three years, and in the hands of twenty perſons, ten of them to be choſen by the King, and the other ten by the Parliament: And that it ſhall be High Treaſon for any to continue ſuch power in the Militia, after three years. And for the Militia to be ſettled in Scotland, they gave no Anſwer at all; though the Papers delivered into them, were to ſettle the Militia of both Kingdoms.

This Anſwer of the King's Commiſſioners to the great Point of the Militia, gave much diſſatisfaction to the Parliament's Commiſſioners. And the Earl of Northumberland, Mr. Pierpoint, Mr. Hollis, and I, with others of us, adviſing in private about it, endeavoured by particular Applications to our Friends of the King's Commiſſioners, to get a better Anſwer, and more complying with the Parliament from them.

But it could not be obtained, and they hinted to us, that they were bound up by their Inſtructions from the King, that they could go no farther. Yet they promiſed to ſend to Oxford, to ſee if they could prevail there, for a further conceſſion from his Majeſty in this particular. But nothing came of it.

We ſent the Papers on both parts in every diſpatch to the Parliament, and when theſe of the Militia were read, the Houſe of Commons ſeemed much troubled at them: ſome were pleaſed, who were no great Wiſhers of Peace; and others doubted thereupon of any good ſucceſs in the preſent Treaty.

London.

7. The Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London ſent a Letter to the Speaker, intimating the ſcarcity of Fleſh-meats, by the deſtruction of Cattle in the time of theſe Wars, and the good by encouraging the Fiſhing; and ſubmitted the whole, not as to the keeping of Lent, but to prevent Dearth, to the judgment of the houſes: Who ordered an Ordinance to be brought in for this buſineſs. 20 Car.

After a Debate from Morning till the Evening, upon the Alterations made by the Lords in the Ordinance of the new Model, the Commons voted, That Sir Thomas Fairfax ſhould nominate all the Commanders in his Army, to be taken out of any the other Armies, and to receive the approbation of both Houſes. Army.

The Scots Commiſſioners at Uxbridge were much unſatisfied, that no Anſwer was given touching the Settlement of the Militia in Scotland, and took it as an high neglect of that Kingdom. Uxbridge.

They and the Parliament's Commiſſioners gave in ſome Papers to the King's Commiſſioners, touching the Propoſitions for Ireland.

A Letter was paſt to be ſent to the Parliament of Scotland, concerning the Scots preſent advance Southwards.

8. The Commons ſat from Eight a Clock in the Morning, till Eight a Clock at Night, upon the Alterations made by the Lords in the Ordinance, for the new Model: And agreed to moſt of them, and ordered Reaſons to be drawn up to ſatisfy the Lords in thoſe wherein they differed. Army.

They voted, that all Officers in the new Army that ſhall be approved by both houſes, ſhall take the Covenant within twenty days, and the Soldiers, in a time to be ſet for it.

Propoſitions

Anno 1644. Propoſitions touching Navigation ſent from the Lords.

The Commons had information of a great Deſign in Bucks, to diſſolve the Treaty at Uxbridge, Petition. to be effected by a Petition framed for them; and great Endeavours to get hands to it in Bucks.

The Petition was directed to the Commiſſioners of both ſides at Uxbridge, and 5000 Inhabitants were deſigned to come with it.

The Commons had a Copy of the Petition, the Effect whereof was, That Religion might be eſtabliſhed as in the pureſt times of Queen Elizabeth, &c.

Sir John Lawrence was informed to be the active Promoter of this Petition, and was therefore ſent for in Cuſtody to the Parliament.

The Directory for Worſhip was much approved by the Aſſembly in Scotland.

General Leven went towards Carliſle to aſſiſt in the Siege there.

Macquire. Macquire upon his Trial in the King's-Bench, was found Guilty, and had Judgment of High Treaſon pronounced againſt him, to be hanged, drawn and quartered: He deſired to be beheaded, and to have his Execution reſpited, till he might ſpeak with Sir Baſil Brooke, and Mr. Walter Mountague. The Judge ſaid, he would acquaint the Parliament therewith, and obſerve their Directions.

Uxbridge. The King's Commiſſioners at Uxbridge gave in their Anſwer to the Propoſition concerning Ireland, Ireland. and therein juſtified the King in making a Ceſſation with the Rebels there; and that he is in honour bound to maintain it. And they would by no means yield to that part of the Propoſition, To proſecute the War againſt the Iriſh Rebels.

Religion. The Commiſſioners entred upon a ſecond Debate concerning Religion; the King's Doctors highly inſiſted upon Epiſcopacy to be continued.

12. Orders for new Sheriffs and for Monies for the Army; and the Lords were deſired to expedite the Ordinance for the new Model.

News came that Goring's Horſe, and a Party of Foot from Portland, by a ſudden Aſſault took the Works at Weymouth, and the Town was in great danger to be loſt, if not ſuddenly relieved.

Orders were thereupon ſent to Sir William Waller, to march immediately for Relief of Weymouth.

The Houſe was in a grand Committee to conſider of the Buſineſs of the Navy, and of the Cuſtoms.

An Ordinance paſſed for raiſing of Monies for the Scots Army to march Southwards.

13. Letters from Sir William Waller intimated Diſobedience in ſome of the Soldiers to march into the Weſt, and deſired farther Power. The Houſe referred it to the Committee of both Kingdoms, to give ſuch Power accordingly.

Such was the Inconſtancy of the Soldiers, and the Incertainty of the Affairs of the Parliament, and of War.

Soldiers unruly. Thoſe who had been ſo well paid by the Parliament, now diſpute their Commands, occaſioned by the Unſettledneſs of the Parliament's Buſineſs, and the Diſcontents among the Soldiery, becauſe their General Eſſex was laid aſide. And here began their firſt Unrulineſs.

Treaſurers of Counties ordered to pay no Monies to Commanders who lay down their Comiſſions, without farther order.

Letters from Major Bridges Governor of Warwick, informed, that he ſent two of the three Companies of his Garriſon by ſmall Parties into the Country, as to gather Contribution, but commanded the Officers not to return without farther Orders from him.

To theſe he got an addition of eighty Foot, and ſeventy Horſe, with theſe he marched all Night, and the next Morning by Day-break began to ſtorm Stoke-houſe, which the King's Forces were then fortifying, and ſtood between two other of their Garriſons; the Houſe was ſtrong, and ſtoutly defended for an hour and an half, and then Bridges entred it by Force, without the loſs of one Man, though they were without Shelter, and the Bullets and Stones flew thick about them. M. Bridges.

The King's Garriſon at Campden and Eveſham drew out to relieve their Friends; but Bridges had done his Work, took away his Priſoners, and fired the Houſe, being a Fort only of Papiſts.

The Priſoners were five Papiſt Captains, and about thirty more Officers and Gentlemen all Papiſts, beſides the Common Soldiers.

The Commons deliver'd their Reaſons to the Lords, why they could not agree; that thoſe Commanders who refuſed the Covenant, ſhould be made uncapable of ever ſerving the Parliament; becauſe that Scruple of Conſcience might in time be removed, and they be perſuaded to take the Covenant; to the reſt they agreed. Covenant.

At the ſame Conference they offered Letters that came from the Army, from Perſons of Credit, of the great Complaints againſt ſome Commanders of Horſe, and of the mutinous and diſobedient Carriage of the Soldiers, refuſing to march to relieve Weymouth, being in great Diſtreſs, and that at the Muſter, no Men appeared ſo full, and well arm'd, and civil as Colonel Cromwell's Horſe. Mutinous Soldiers. Cromwell.

The Lords then ſhewed other Letters of the mutinous Carriage of the Soldiers, all which were referred to the Committee of both Kingdoms to be examined.

Letters from Sir William Waller informed, that he was reſolved to march to relieve Weymouth with thoſe that will follow him, the reſt to be looked upon according to their Demerit. Waller.

The Committee reported ſeveral Murthers, Rapes, and other Cruelties, committed by ſome of the Parliament's Soldiers, particularly ſome Servants ſlain or wounded deſperately, of Mr. Hobey's a Member of the Houſe, and he called by them a Parliament Dog. Soldiers Inſolent.

Some of the Officers grew unſufferably diſſolute, and inſolent; and their Soldiers followed the Example of their Commanders, ſo that it was found high time to make a Reformation among them.

The Ordinance was debated for reſtraining the killing of Fleſh.

The French Letters were ſtayed, becauſe of ſending the Parliament's Letters to the King of France to take off the Seizure there of ſome of the Engliſh Merchants Goods.

Goods of ſome Tradeſmen of London ſold to the Enemy were reſtored, becauſe they were not for Hoſtility, and the ſame Men traded to Ayleſbury.

Captain Stone, under Sir William Brereton, marched with a ſmall Party againſt Patſhall Houſe, a Popiſh Garriſon ſtrongly fortified and moated; and taking the Opportunity of the Draw-bridge being let down, he ſuddenly forced his Paſſage, ſurprized the Centries, and fell in among the Garriſon, fought with them in the Houſe, killed many, and took with divers Gentlemen of Quality, two Jeſuits, and about ſixty Soldiers Priſoners, and poſſeſſed the Houſe, Arms, and Ammunition, and good Prize. Captain Stone.

The firſt three days of the Treaty were ſpent upon the Propoſitions touching Religion, the three next days about the Militia, the third three days about Uxbridge.

20 Car.

Anno 1644. about Ireland; then they began again with other three days about Religion, whereof this was the laſt.

In this time of the Treaty, the King's Commiſſioners would not agree to the taking away of Biſhops, only they offered ſome Limitation of their Power.

The Directory for Worſhip ſettled by Parliament, they would not agree unto, and the National Covenant, they in expreſs and poſitive Terms denied.

Dr. Steward, and Dr. Shelden again argued very poſitively, That the Government by Biſhops was Jure divino. Mr. Henderſon, and Mr. Vines argued as poſitively, but more modeſtly to the contrary, and that the Government of the Church by Presbyteries, was Jure divino.

Jure divino.

15. The Lords aſſented to the leaving out the Clauſe in the Ordinance for the new Model to make them uncapable who refuſed the Covenant, but that they ſhould be diſplaced from their Commands, till they did take it, to which the Commons to avoid more delay, agreed, and ſo the Ordinance paſſed.

Covenant.

Sir William Brereton ſent out a Party, and beat the Enemy from Holt-bridge, and placed a Garriſon there.

17. The French Reſident wrote a Letter to the Houſe of Commons, as by direction from his Maſter the French King, adviſing the Parliament to prolong the Treaty at Uxbridge for ſome longer time, as that, which in his opinion would conduce much to the good of the Kingdom, and was of great concernment; and that it was the cuſtom of other Princes to prolong Treaties and ſo it was then at the Treaty of Munſter. There was nothing done upon this Letter.

Uxbridge.

The Commiſſioners at Uxbridge were entred upon the Propoſitions concerning the Militia, ſecunda vice, and upon conſultation of the Commiſſioners of both Kingdoms, they held it requiſite to ſend one of their own number up to the Parliament, to give them a full account of all their proceedings hitherto, and to deſire ſome farther Inſtructions from them, and particularly touching the Militia.

They likewiſe voted, That the Commiſſioners at Uxbridge ſhould treat three days more than the twenty days firſt allotted, in lieu of the three Lords-days that happened in that time, ſo that the Treaty is to continue till the two and twentieth of Febr. and that they ſhall have power to treat on any of the three Propoſitions appointed to be treated on.

Argyle routed.

The Marqueſs of Argyle ſent into the Army of the Earl of Montroſe ſome Scouts and Spies, who at firſt dealt faithfully with him, but afterwards betrayed him, and ſent him Intelligence, that the Army of Montroſe with the Iriſh Rebels, come over into Scotland were remote from him, whereas they were near to his Forces.

Argyle (though late) having diſcovered this and the Enemies coming upon him, and finding his Officers and Soldiers full of mettle, reſolved to fight them, but in the Battle ſome of his men, thoſe of Cantyre revolted from him, and turned their Muſquets againſt their fellows. 20. Car.

This ſo diſcouraged Argyle's Men, that they gave back and retreated, which Montroſe perceiving, fell on with great reſolution upon them, routed the whole body of Argyle's Men, killed divers, and took many of them Priſoners.

A Party of about 150 of the King's from Skipton, beat up Colonel Brandling's Quarters at Heightley, ſurprized the Guards, came into the Town, and took near a hundred Priſoners, 60 Horſe, and other booty. Colonel Brandling.

As they returned, Colonel Lambert's Men fell upon them, reſcued their friends and the booty, took Captain Hughes who commanded the King's Party, killed his Lieutenant, and about 15 of his Men, and took about 20 of them Priſoners, purſuing the reſt to Skipton. Samon one of Lambert's Captains, and about eight of his Soldiers were killed. *C. 19. Four Members of the Commons Houſe were ſent by them for Sir Thomas Fairfax, to bring him to the Houſe, where a Chair was ſet for him, but he modeſtly refuſed to ſit down. Sir Thomas Fairfax.

The Speaker told him ſomewhat of Agamemnon and of the old Romans, which I have forgotten; then he informed him of the great truſt the Kingdom repoſed in him, in the Command of the Army, and the good opinion they had of him for his valour and fidelity, giving him thanks in the name of the Houſe, for the many and great ſervices he had done for the publick, and in the defence of Religion, Laws, and Liberty, and encouraged him to go on as he had begun. And in the Houſe he received his Commiſſion to be General.

Uxbridge Militia.

But they being impowered by their additional Inſtructions to reaſſume the buſineſs of the Militia when they pleaſed; the Parliament voted, that their Commiſſioners ſhall have power to treat with the King's Commiſſioners about paſſing a Bill for ſettling

the

The Parliament's Commiſſioners anſwered, that if the King had conſented to any one of the Propoſitions, it might have been ſome encouragement to move the Parliament for longer time, but as things were it could not be expected.

Both Houſes ſat till nine a clock at night, in expectation of ſome good news from Uxbridge, this being the laſt day of the Treaty; and about eight at night at a Conference, the Lords communicated to the Commons a Paper from the King's Commiſſioners at Uxbridge, For the King to come to Weſtminſter upon a ſafe Conduct, ſo that the Treaty might be continued for a longer time.

Which being debated, and a Letter coming the ſame time from the Parliament's Commiſſioners from Uxbridge, That all this day till ſeven at night, there appeared no Compliance in the King's Commiſſioners to grant any of the Propoſitions, and that they preſſed only for a longer time.

Upon this the Houſe of Commons did riſe, without doing any thing in the buſineſs, and this night till twelve a clock the Commiſſioners may treat, and not longer; and the Parliament's Commiſſioners have declared, That to morrow being the Lord's-day, is not intended for one of the two days within the ſafe Conduct for them to return.

This cauſed much trouble in the minds of many honeſt men, Lovers of their Countries Peace; and divers of the Kings Commiſſioners, as well as the other, ſeemed ſorry that all their Endeavours to ſo good an end, ſhould prove ſo fruitleſs.

The King's Commiſſioners thought the advantage much on their part, that longer time to treat was denied by the Parliament, and gave it out, That if that had been granted, there would have been a happy iſſue of the Treaty.

Thoſe of the other ſide affirmed, That there could be no expectation of a good iſſue of the Treaty, or Inducement for the Parliament to grant longer time for the Treaty, when not one of the Parliament's Propoſitions was granted by the King, during the whole time of the Treaty.

Various Judgments were paſſed by all perſons, according to their own fancies or intereſts, moſt ſober

The Speaker acquainted the Houſe herewith, and they gave way to the Ambaſſadors coming, who went firſt to the Lords, and after to the Commons, and deliver'd their Meſſage to this effect.

Naſeby Battle. This was the Day of the famous Battle at Naſeby. The King had drawn off from Borough-Hill to Harborough, purpoſing to march to Pomfret, and thinking if he were followed, he ſhould fight with more advantage Northward.

Fairfax ſent out Ireton with a flying Party of Horſe, who fell upon a Party of the King's Rear quartered in Naſeby Town, took many Priſoners, ſome of the Prince's Life-guard, and Langdale's Brigade. 21 Car.

This gave ſuch an Alarm to the whole Army, that the King at Midnight leaves his own Quarters, and for ſecurity haſtens to Harborough, where the Van of his Army was quartered, raiſeth Prince Rupert, and calls a Council of War.

There it was reſolved (and chiefly by Prince Rupert's Eagerneſs, old Commanders being much againſt it) to give Battle: and becauſe Fairfax had been ſo forward, they would no longer ſtay for him, but ſeek him out. Fairfax was come from Gilborough to Gilling, and from thence to Naſeby, where both Armies drawn up in Battalia, faced each other.

The King commanded the main Body of his Army, Prince Rupert and Prince Maurice the Right Wing, Sir Marmaduke Langdale the Left, the Earl of Lindſey and the Lord Aſhley the right hand Reſerve, the Lord Bard and Sir George L'Iſle the left Reſerve.

Of the Parliament's Army Fairfax and Skippon commanded the Main Body, Cromwell the Right Wing, with whom was Roſſeter, and they both came in but a little before the Fight: Ireton commanded the Left Wing, the Reſerves were brought up by Rainsborough, Hammond and Pride.

Prince Rupert began and charged the Parliament's Left Wing with great Reſolution; Ireton made gallant Reſiſtance, but at laſt was forced to give Ground, he himſelf being run through the Thigh with a Pike, and into the Face with a Halbert, and his Horſe ſhot under him, and himſelf taken Priſoner.

Prince Rupert follows the Chaſe almoſt to Naſeby Town, and in his return, ſummoned the Train, who made no other Anſwer but by their Fire-locks; he alſo viſited the Carriages where was good Plunder, but his long Stay ſo far from the main Body was no ſmall Prejudice to the King's Army.

In the mean time Cromwell charged furiouſly on the King's Left Wing, and got the better, forcing them from the Body, and proſecuting the Advantage, quite broke them, and their Reſerve.

During which, the main Bodies had charged one another with incredible Fierceneſs, often Retreating and Rallying, falling in together with the But-ends of their Muskets, and coming to hand Blows with their Swords.

Langdale's Men having been in ſome diſcontent before, did not in this Fight behave themſelves as they uſed to do in others, as their own Party gave it out of them; yet they did their Parts, and the reſt of the King's Army both Horſe and Foot performed their Duties with great Courage and Reſolution, both Commanders and Soldiers.

Some of the Parliament Horſe having lingred awhile about Pillage, and being in ſome diſadvantage, Skippon perceiving it, brought up his Foot ſeaſonably to their Aſſiſtance, and in this Charge (as himſelf related it to me) was ſhot in the Side.

Cromwell coming in with his victorious Right Wing, they all charged together upon the King, who unable to endure any longer, got out of the Field towards Leiceſter.

Prince Rupert, who now too late returned from his improvident eager Purſuit, ſeeing the Day loſt, accompanied them in their flight, leaving a compleat Victory to the Parliamentarians, who had the Chaſe of them for 14 Miles, within two Miles of Leiceſter; and the King finding Anno 1645. finding the Purſuit ſo hot, left that Town, and haſtes to Litchfield.

This Battle was won and loſt as that of Marſton-Moor, but proved more deſtructive to the King and his Party; and it was exceeding bloody, both Armies being very courageous and numerous, and not 500 odds on either Side.

It was fought in a large fallow Field, on the North-weſt ſide of Naſeby, about a Mile broad, which ſpace of Ground was wholly taken up.

Skippon. On the Paliament's Side were wounded and ſlain above 1000 Officers and private Soldiers. Major General Skippon (an old experienced Soldier) was ordered to draw up the form of the Battle, he fought ſtoutly that Day, and although he was ſorely wounded in the beginning of the Fight, and the General deſired him to go off the Field, he anſwered, he would not ſtir ſo long as a Man would ſtand, and accordingly ſtaid till the Battle was ended.

Ireton was dangerouſly hurt, and taken Priſoner for a while, after he had done his Part, but, in the confuſion of the Fight got looſe again, and ſaw the Victory atchieved by his Party.

Fairfax. The General had his Helmet beat off, and riding in the Field bare-headed up and down from one part of his Army to another, to ſee how they ſtood, and what advantage might be gained, and coming up to his own Life Guard commanded by Colonel Charles D'Oyley, he was told by him that he expoſed himſelf to too much Danger, and the whole Army thereby, riding bare-headed in the Fields, and ſo many Bullets flying about him, and D'Oyley offered his General his Helmet, but he refuſed it, ſaying, it is well enough Charles: and ſeeing a Body of the King's Foot ſtand, and not at all broken, he asked D'Oyley if he had charged that Body, who anſwered, that he had twice charged them, but could not break them.

With that Fairfax bid him to charge them once again in the Front, and that he would take a commanded Party, and charge them in the Rear at the ſame time, and they might meet together in the middle; and bad him, when Fairfax gave the Sign to begin the Charge.

D'Oyley purſued his General's Orders, and both together charging that Body put them into a Confuſion, and broke them, and Fairfax and D'Oyley met indeed in the middle of them, where Fairfax killed the Enſign, and one of D'Oyley's Troopers took the Colours, bragging of the Service he had done in killing the Enſign and taking the chief Colours.

D'Oyley chid the Trooper for his boaſting and lying, telling him how many Witneſſes there were who ſaw the General do it with his own hand, but the General himſelf bad D'Oyley to let the Trooper alone, and ſaid to him, I have Honour enough, let him take that Honour to himſelf.

Both the General and the Lieutenant General performed their Work with admirable Reſolution, and by their particular Examples infuſed Valour into their Followers, ſo likewiſe did the other Officers, of whom divers were wounded.

The King. On the other ſide the King ſhewed himſelf this Day a courageous General, keeping cloſe with his Horſe, and himſelf in Perſon rallying them to hot Encounters.

The Earl of Lindſey, Lord Aſhley, Colonel Ruſſel and others wounded, performed their Parts with great Gallantry, 20 Colonels, Knights, and Officers of note, and 600 private Soldiers were ſlain on the King's Part; but much more was the Damage he ſuſtained by thoſe taken.

That is 6 Colonels, 8 Lieutenant Colonels, 18 Majors, 70 Captains, 8 Lieutenants, 200 Enſigns, and other inferior Officers, 4500 common Soldiers, beſides 100 Iriſh Women, and many other Women who followed the Camp, 13 of the King's Houſhold Servants, 4 of his Footmen, 12 Pieces of Ordnance, 8000 Arms, 40 Barrels of Powder, 200 Carriages, all their Bag and Baggage, with ſtore of rich Pillage, 3000 Horſe, the King's Standard, and divers Colours of Horſe and Foot, one of the King's Coaches, and his Cabinets of Letters and Papers. 21 Car.

Then according to the deſire of Sir Thomas Fairfax in his Letters, they ordered a Day of Thankſgiving to God for it, the Parliament to keep it at Chriſt-Church, and the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and the Common Council to be deſired to meet the Parliament there; and another Day of publick Thankſgiving for this Victory was appointed to be kept in all Counties within the Power of the Parliament.

Both Houſes order'd the Continuance of the Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, and of the Maſter of the Rolls for ſix Months longer, notwithſtanding the Self-denying Ordinance.

By contrivance of ſome of the Presbyterian Party to take Mr. Hollis and me out of the way, the Lord Savile newly revolted from the King accuſed us of High Treaſon to the Parliament, for adviſing the King at Oxford, when we were there the Parliament's Commiſſioners. We were perſecuted with all Eagerneſs, and defended ourſelves with all Conſtancy and mutual Fidelity, and by the Unworthineſs of the Accuſer and Innocency Anno 1645. of the Accuſed, and Juſtice of the Houſe, but chiefly thro' the Goodneſs of God, after a long and ſtrict Examination, and great Trouble to us, we were by Vote of the Houſe clearly acquitted from any Miſdemeanour in this Buſineſs, and the Lord Savile was committed.

Lord Savile. Mr. Gordon a Member of the Houſe of Commons preſented to them a Letter from the Lord Savile, with a Paper incloſed in it, and deſired that they might be read, and after ſome Debate they were read: The Letter was expreſſing his Affections to the Parliament, to whom he had come from the King and ſubmitted himſelf, and taken the Oath enjoyned; in obſervance whereof, and of his Duty to the Parliament, under whoſe Protection he was, he held himſelf obliged to diſcover to them what he knew concerning two of their Members, who had done contrary to their Truſt, and to the Prejudice of the Parliament in the Matters contained in the incloſed Paper.

Hollis and Whitelocke accuſed. That Paper ſet forth, That Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke being Perſons well affected to the King, and to his Cauſe, were nevertheleſs two of the Parliaments Commiſſioners lately ſent to Oxford to his Majeſty with Propoſitions from the Parliament for Peace.

That they being at Oxford did contrary to their Truſt, and to the Prejudice of the Parliament, treat and adviſe with the King, and ſome great Lords about him, namely, the Earl of Lindſey, the Earl of Southampton, and others, about the King's Anſwer to thoſe Propoſitions, and did give a Paper in writing what they adviſed the King's Anſwer ſhould be.

That their Advice in the ſaid Paper was followed by the King, and ſome of the very Words thereof were made uſe of in the King's Anſwer, and that both before and after that time, they held Intelligence and Correſpondence with the King and his Party at Oxford.

Much other Matter was in the Paper to the like effect, and upon the reading of it, divers of the Houſe were very high, and moved that Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke might make a preſent Anſwer to this Paper, or Charge, as ſome called it.

Mr. Hollis preſently in his place made his Anſwer to the matter of the Paper, and therein unadviſedly and ſuddenly confeſſed more than he needed to have done: As that a Paper was given by us to the Earl of Lindſey and ſome other Particulars; but denied any Advice given by us what Anſwer the King ſhould make to the Propoſitions, or any Intelligence or Correſpondence by him with any of the King's Party.

I was not in Town this Morning, and knew nothing of this Buſineſs; but after Mr. Hollis had ſpoken, Mr. John L'Iſle ſtood up and acquainted the Houſe that Mr. Whitelocke being then abſent, if they pleaſed he would undertake to give him notice to attend the Houſe the next Day, which was order'd.

But ſome were not ſatisfied therewith, and they fiercely moved, That this being a Charge of High Treaſon againſt two of their Members, in whom the Offence was greater than in others, that they would proceed with equal Juſtice; and that both Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke might be committed to the Tower, Mr. Hollis who was preſent to be ſent thither, and a Warrant to apprehend Mr. Whitelocke and to carry him thither alſo.

Upon this Sir William Lewys ſtood up, and with as much Vigour on the other ſide, ſaid, He could not but wonder at the Juſtice of thoſe who would commit a Man to the Tower before he was heard, and the other after he had fully anſwered that which they called a Charge.

That he could not admit it to be a Charge, but a ſcandalous and libellous Paper againſt two worthy Members of the Houſe, who, they all knew, had ſerved the Parliament faithfully, and to the utmoſt hazard of their Lives and Fortunes. 21 Car.

And becauſe they had done ſo, and were ſo capable of doing further and more Service to the Parliament, therefore one of their Enemies was come hither to caſt a Bone among them, and to raiſe Differences among ſt the Members of Parliament; a likely way when their other Deſigns failed them, to do Miſchief to the Parliament.

He deſired them to conſider the Perſon of him whom they called the Accuſer, who was indeed an Accuſer of the Brethren, that it was the Lord Savile, now cloathed with a new Title from the King of Earl of Suſſex, and perhaps this preſent Service was to be part of that by which he was yet to merit his new Title.

That ſtill he was the ſame Man who was firſt of the Parliament Party, then revolted from them to the King, and now was revolted from the King to the Parliament again, and that a Paper brought in from this Perſon ſhould be looked upon as a Charge againſt two worthy Members of their Houſe, or be in the leaſt a Ground to commit them to the Tower, he could not ſufficiently wonder at the Reaſon or Juſtice of ſuch a Motion as that was.

He rather thought it more reaſonable and juſt, and accordingly moved, that this Libel, this Paper might be thrown out of the Houſe, and the Contriver of it, the Lord Savile, be under more ſtrait Cuſtody, and examined who ſet him on to promote this Buſineſs; and that Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke might not be put to the Trouble of any farther Attendance about it.

This ſmart Motion of Sir William Lewys, ſo contrary to the former, being ſpoken by him with great Ingenuity and Mettle, and ſeconded by Sir Philip Stapleton and others of that Party, ſo wrought upon the Houſe, that the Motion for Commitment to the Tower was laid aſide, and Mr. L'Iſle order'd to give notice to Mr. Whitelocke that the Houſe required his Attendance there the next Day.

Carliſle was ſurrender'd to the Parliament, and Sir Thomas Glenham the Governor and the Garriſon Soldiers had a Convoy by the Articles of Surrender to Newark. Carliſle.

3. At a Conference the Letters of the Surrender of Carliſle were imparted to the Lords, and agreed to ſend a Committee to the Common Council of London to acquaint them with ſome of the King's Letters taken at Naſeby.

A Committee appointed to conſider of the Northern Garriſons upon the Borders of Scotland.

The King was at Ragland Caſtle to gather Recruits, Sir Thomas Fairfax was at Marlborough: the Garriſon of Taunton had often Skirmiſhes with Goring's Forces; and at one time took 120 of their Horſe: The Beſiegers drew off moſt of their Horſe to their Outguards.

Between 4000 and 5000 Clubmen being up in Dorſetſhire and Wilts carried themſelves very tumultuouſly, and forced the Parliament's Quarters at Sturmiſter; divers ſlain and wounded on both ſides, and they took ſixty Dragoon Horſes and Arms from the Parliament's Forces, for Reſtitution whereof Colonel Maſſey ſent a Trumpeter to them, and they promiſed to make Reſtitution the next day. Clubmen.

Letters ſent from both Houſes to Sir Thomas Fairfax and Colonel Maſſey to inform the Clubmen of the Parliament's Intentions to relieve Taunton, and to require them to depart peaceably to their Habitations; and that they ſhould not be queſtioned for their riſing, otherwiſe to be taken as Contemners of the Parliament's Authority, and to be fallen upon as Enemies.

The King's Letters taken at Naſeby were read at the Common Council, and Obſervations upon them, and they were appointed to be kept in a Place where any might peruſe the Originals for their Satisfaction.

Naſeby Letters.

Scotland Remonſtrance.

The Kingdom of Scotland ſenſible of the Calamities of the three Kingdoms in this Civil War, drew up a Remonſtrance by way of Summons to his Majeſty to come and join with them in the ſolemn League and Covenant; and this being by conſent of the general Aſſembly of that Kingdom, was ſent to his Majeſty.

I attended the Houſe all this Morning, and nothing was ſaid to me in publick by reaſon of the other Buſineſs, about 12 a Clock I acquainted the Houſe that I received a Letter from a worthy Member of the Houſe, ſignifying their Pleaſure that I ſhould attend them, which I now did accordingly, and humbly deſired to know what the Buſineſs was.

Then it was moved by ſome that the Letter and Paper of the Lord Savile might be read to me, others were for a time to be appointed two or three days after for this Buſineſs.

I deſired it might be the next Day.

Upon my Suit, it was appointed for the next Day, and that the Paper and Letters of the Lord Savile ſhould be then ready, and I to be heard to ſay what I thought fit to this Buſineſs.

Prieſts.

4. The Juſtices of Peace not being informed of the Order for Luſher the Prieſt to be ſent out of the Kingdom, proceeded in his Trial, and he was convicted; but the Commons ordered his Reprieve, ſo was one White another Romiſh Prieſt.

Intercepted Letters of the Portugal Ambaſſador were order'd to be broke open by the Committee of Examinations, and notice thereof to be given to the Agent, that, if he pleaſed, he might be preſent.

Fairfax.

The Lord Fairfax had the Thanks of the Houſe for his good Service, and the ſame order'd to be entred into the Journal of the Houſe.

Sir Thomas Fairfax was on his march to Taunton, as far as Blandford, where he joined with Maſſey. Goring had drawn off his Horſe, but left his Foot in the Paſſages to block up Taunton.

The Scots Army were at Birmingham marching towards Worceſter, and in their way took about 80 of the Dudley Horſe.

About ten a Clock ſome Friends of mine called upon the Buſineſs appointed for the Day, and the Letter of the Lord Savile, with the Paper incloſed, were read in the Houſe to me; after which I ſtood up in my Place and made Anſwer to it by way of Narrative to this Effect.

Mr. Speaker,

I am happy ſince I muſt be under an Accuſation (which is no mean thing) in this honourable Houſe, that this Gentleman my Lord Savile is my Accuſer; and more happy that you, to whom I have been ſo long a Servant, and who know my ways ſo well, are to be my Judges.

I ſhall ſay nothing concerning my Lord Savile becauſe he is my Accuſer, but to the parts of his Accuſation I ſhall give you a ſhort and true Anſwer, with all ingenuity and ſubmiſſion to your great judgment.

His firſt part of the Accuſation is, that I was a Perſon well affected to the King, but he gives no Inſtances thereof, nor is it a crime to be well affected to my Sovereign; we have all expreſſed the ſame in our Covenant.

I could give ſome Inſtances to the contrary effect, as the plunder of my Goods, ſeizing the profits of my Lands, indicting my Perſon of High Treaſon for ſerving you, and giving away my Inheritance to Sir Charles Blunt a Papiſt; which are no great motives to an extraordinary affection, more than a Subject is obliged to his Prince. 21. Car.

But if my Lord Savile means by well affected to the King, my being well affected to Peace; I confeſs I am a paſſionate Lover of a good Peace, and Seeker of it, and thereby have teſtified my affection both to King and Parliament; and the longer our Troubles continue, the more we ſhall all be of this opinion and affection.

Sir, I hope I may be thought capable to know my duty to my King, and to underſtand what Protection I was to have from him, the mutual Relations of both; and further I hold my ſelf diſobliged.

The ſecond Accuſation is, "That I met at the Earl "of Lindſey's Lodgings in Oxford, to adviſe about "the King's Anſwer to your Propoſitions, and that I "there did give advice to the King, contrary to the "Truſt repoſed in me by you".

To this I anſwer, That when your Commiſſioners came to Oxford, we conſulted together, what (among other things) was fit for us to do in point of Civilities and Viſits whilſt we were there; and it was agreed by us all, that we ſhould not viſit any that were excepted in your Propoſitions; but that we might viſit others, who did viſit, or ſend Viſits to us.

The Earl of Lindſey ſent to viſit Mr. Hollis and me with a Compliment, That he was not well, elſe he would have come to viſit us at our Lodgings. And I having a particular relation and alliance to him, we went together to return a viſit to his Lordſhip, and told our fellow Commiſſioners of our intentions before we gave the viſit, and they approved of it.

When we came to the Earl's Lodging, we found there the Earl of Southampton, the Lord Savile, and ſome others; but it was ſo far from an appointed meeting, that I knew not of their being there, till I ſaw them in the Chamber.

There was much diſcourſe among us about your Propoſitions, and they urged the Unreaſonableneſs of them; we affirmed the contrary, and vindicated your honour in them.

There was alſo diſcourſe concerning the Scots Commiſſioners, whom they affirmed to be averſe to peace, we aſſured them that they were not, but willing to have a good peace.

There was likewiſe upon this occaſion, diſcourſe of Presbytery, and of the point of Jure divino; we told them that the Scots were off from the rigid Presbytery, and did not inſiſt upon the Point of Jure divino.

They were then likewiſe diſcourſing of Tumults, and of Perſons, and Petitions brought to Weſtminſter in a violent and diſorderly manner; we did not ſpeak of any violent Independent Party, nor any the words mentioned in the Lord Savile's Paper, nor that the Propoſitions were unreaſonable.

They indeed preſſed much upon that Argument, that they were unreaſonable, particularly the Propoſitions concerning Religion and the Militia; we told them, that unleſs the King would grant thoſe Propoſitions it would be in vain to treat of any Peace.

There was alſo much diſcourſe about the acknowledging you to be a Parliament; the Earl of Lindſey ſaid, That the King had acknowledged you a Parliament, by the words, Lords and Commons of Parliament.

We anſwered, That this was the ſame ſtyle his Majeſty gave to the Aſſembly at Oxford, and we could not be ſatisfied with that acknowledgment. Then the Earl of Lindſey demanded of us, how we would be acknowledged? We told him thus;

Anno 1645. The Lords and Commons aſſembled in the Parliament of England at Weſtminſter.

After this we returned to our Lodgings, and acquainted our fellow Commiſſioners with the perſons that were at the Earl of Lindſey*'s Chamber, when we were there, and with the matter of our diſcourſe with them.*

In all our diſcourſes, Mr. Hollis and my ſelf did juſtify your Propoſitions, and vindicate your Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, It is no ſmall trouble to my thoughts, to have my Name queſtioned in this Houſe, but I am comforted in my own integrity and innocency, and in my Accuſer, but chiefly in my Judges, to whom I moſt humbly and moſt willingly ſubmit my ſelf.

After I had ſpoken, there was much debate in the Houſe, whether this Paper of the Lord Savile, were an Accuſation or Charge againſt us? Many Gentlemen argued, That it was againſt the Privilege of the Houſe to take it for an Accuſation, being from the Lord Savile, who was an Enemy come from the King's Quarters, and one in contempt to both Houſes of Parliament, for refuſing to name the Perſon from whom he received the Letter concerning Mr. Hollis, and therefore committed a cloſe Priſoner.

That he had not diſcovered this to the Parliament in five or ſix Months together that he had been in their quarters, but after he had been complained of by Mr. Hollis about a Letter, and Mr. Whitelocke was in the Chair of the Committee appointed to examine the buſineſs of that Letter.

Then the Lord Savile brought in a new Accuſation both againſt Mr. Hollis, and Mr. Whitelocke the Chairman, to take off his teſtimony for Mr. Hollis.

Others went upon this ground, That this buſineſs might be committed, to ſee if the Lord Savile would avow his Letter and Paper, and by what teſtimony he could make it good, and that Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke might have reparation, and be cleared from this aſperſion.

But theſe were not our Friends, and moved this out of a deſign to bring the buſineſs before a Committee to be examined, more than out of reſpect to us.

After a long debate, it was at laſt referred to a Committee to be examined in the general, and Power given to the Committee to examine any Member of the Houſe, and a Meſſage ſent to the Lords, to deſire that the Lord Savile might be examined at this Committee.

Thoſe who were of a contrary party to the Earl of Eſſex, ſet their intereſt upon it, to ruin Mr. Hollis, whom they found to be a great Pillar of that Party, and with him to ruin me, we being both involved in this buſineſs; but they had not the ſame envy againſt me, as they had againſt Mr. Hollis; nor could they well ſever us.

But now having got it referred to a Committee, they reſolved there to put it home, and were full of expectation to deſtroy both of us, which was their intention.

5. A Letter from the Portugal Agent; and his carriage to the Parliament referred to a Committee, and how the Parliament might be vindicated therein.

Order, that the Militia of London ſhould put in execution the Ordinance for ſearching for Papiſts and Delinquents.

Propoſals from the Governor of Windſor for ſupply of that Garriſon preſented to the Houſe from the Common Council of London, referred to the Committee of the Army.

Taunton. Sir Thomas Fairfax and Colonel Maſſey marched from Blandford towards Taunton, their Scouts and Goring's had ſome Encounters; but Goring underſtanding that Sir Thomas Fairfax was advancing towards him, drew off all his Horſe and Foot from before Taunton, and went towards Exeter. 21. Car.

The Lords ſent a Meſſage to the Houſe of Commons, in anſwer of theirs yeſterday, That the Lord Savile, if he pleaſed, might be examined from time to time at the Committee, to whom the buſineſs of his Letter was referred.

7. Divers of Weſtminſter in the name of the City, petitioned the Houſe for Maintenance for the Lecturers in Weſtminſter-Abbey, out of the Revenues belonging to the Dean and Chapter there.

Thereupon an Ordinance was read and committed, for regulating the College of Weſtminſter, and the Petitioners called in, and acquainted with the care of the Houſe in their buſineſs, and had the thanks of the Houſe.

Letters from Scout-maſter General Watſon, informed, that the Enemy was wholly drawn off from before Taunton.

An Ordinance ſent up to the Lords, for making Mr. Jackſon Lecturer at Glouceſter, and a 100 l. per annum to be ſettled on him; and the Houſe ordered Colonel Morgan to be Governor there.

An Ordinance ſent up to the Lords for One per cent. for the Captives in Algiers.

Commiſſioners to Scotland.

The Marqueſs of Argyle was in purſuit of Montroſe over the Hills, and the Parliament of Scotland being now ſat, the Parliament of England appointed the Earl of Rutland, the Lord Wharton, Sir Henry Vane ſenior, Sir William Ermine, Mr. Hatcher, and Mr. Goodwyn, to be their Commiſſioners in Scotland.

The King with about 4000 Horſe and Foot was at Hereford, to raiſe 5000 l. Aſſeſſment, and ſome Recruits.

The Committee of Salop took in Cauſe Caſtle, Hawarden Caſtle, and Lynſell Houſe, belonging to Sir Richard Lucy, and ſat down with their Forces before High Arcall the Lord Newport's Houſe.

In the Afternoon Mr. Hollis and I attended the Committee touching my Lord Savile's Accuſation, where Mr. Samuel Brown had the Chair, and was no friend to Mr. Hollis or to me in this buſineſs, but preſſed matters againſt us, more than a Chairman was to do.

The Lord Savile was brought into the Committee, and his Letter and Paper read to him, which he owned as his, and his hand to them, and that he would juſtify them to be true upon his Soul and his Life.

Mr. Hollis and I averred the contrary, but with leſs paſſion, and with leſs indiſcretion than the Lord Savile, who being put to it by the Committee, could not make any proof of one particular mentioned in his Papers, more than we ourſelves acknowledged; which was the ſame in effect that we had ſaid before in our Narratives in the Houſe.

Every particular Clauſe in his Papers was ſeverally read, and he heard to them, and we to make our Anſwers: but we both did it, with this Reſervation, That what we did in this, was out of our willingneſs to give any ſatisfaction we could to the Committee, or to any particular Gentleman; but we hoped that we ſhould not be examined upon this, as a charge againſt us, which was not allowed to be ſo

by

Anno 1645. by the Houſe. Which after ſome debate ſeemed to be admitted, and that in general we ſhould be heard in this buſineſs by the Committee, which we our ſelves freely offered.

The Lord Savile inſiſted upon a Letter from Mr. Hollis to the Duke of Richmond in a correſpondence with his Grace, but that did not touch me, nor did he prove by the Letter a Correſpondence by Mr. Hollis, but by ſome circumſtances raiſed jealouſies of it in ſome of their minds who were not Friends.

Nor could his Lordſhip prove any thing of his Information, that we diſtinguiſhed the Parties among us in the Parliament into the Presbyterian and the Independent Parties; the Earl of Eſſex and the Scots as the Heads of the Presbyterians; and the other Party being the Independent Party, to be averſe to Peace: but the Earl of Eſſex and his Party (of which Mr. Hollis and I were) to be the friends to Peace; which Words were denied by us.

The Committee adjourned to the next day, and nothing was further done at this meeting.

8. An Ordinance for regulating the Univerſity of Cambridge, read the firſt and ſecond time.

Order for Money for the Lord Fairfax's Forces, and for the other Northern Forces of that Aſſociation.

An Ordinance ſent to the Lords for levying 12000 l. in the Eaſtern Aſſociation.

Order for 2000 pair of Shoes, and 2000 pair of Stockings for Sir Thomas Fairfax's Foot-ſoldiers.

A Soldier of Sir Thomas Fairfax was hanged for running away from his Colours, and a Dragooner hanged for robbing a Countryman upon the Highway; ſome few of his Men ſtaying behind at a Fair, were ſurprized by the King's Forces from the Devizes.

Clubmen. Agents came from the Clubmen in Dorſetſhire, to Sir Thomas Fairfax, deſiring his Paſs for their Commiſſioners to go to the King, and others to the Parliament, with their Propoſals for a new Treaty of Peace, and for a Ceſſation of Arms in the mean time; and for the Towns and Garriſons of Dorſetſhire and Wiltſhire in the mean time to be put in their hands.

Fairfax. To this Sir Thomas Fairfax gave an Anſwer in writing, That he could not allow of their Demands, nor be an Inſtrument to convey them to the Parliament; becauſe by the Ceſſation of Arms, and the Garriſons to be put into their hands, the Parliament ſhould be diſabled to carry on the War in their own defence, until a firm Peace might be ſettled, which he and his Army deſired, as much as any, and was the end of this War.

That he would undertake that the Army under his command ſhould not injure the Country, whereof they already had ſome experience; and thus he diſmiſſed the Clubmens Agents.

The Governor of Lyme had an Encounter with ſome of them, and killed about 50 of them, led by one of Goring's Officers.

Fleetwood. Colonel Fleetwood with a Party of 2000 Horſe and Dragoons, was ſent to follow the Rear of Goring, whoſe Forces haſtened away, and they took only about 10 Priſoners.

Sir Charles Lucas with a Party from Barkley Caſtle fell upon the quarters of ſome of the Parliament's Forces, who received them, and routed the whole Party, killed 16, wounded many, took 38 Priſoners.

Hollis and Whitelocke. In the Afternoon Hollis and I attended the Committee for the Lord Savile's buſineſs, which was very full: And many were there to promote the deſign of ruining us; and to preſerve us, there were Mr. Recorder Glyn, Sir Philip Stapleton, Sir William Lewys, and many other noble Gentlemen conſtantly attending upon this Great Committee. 21 Car.

The Lord Savile was again brought in to the Committee, and, as before, he juſtified the Paper; and that in the King's Anſwer to the Propoſitions, there were divers expreſſions and words, the ſame with thoſe in the Paper which Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke did give to the Earl of Lindſey at Oxford.

Being again ſhewed his Paper, and demanded by the Committee to ſay in particular what were the ſame words he intended, he deſired to ſee the King's Anſwer; which was delivered to him, and he comparing our Paper, and the King's Anſwer together, obſerved ſeveral expreſſions and words in our Paper to be the ſame, with expreſſions and words in the King's Paper, and did particularly ſet forth which they were.

Mr. Recorder asked, If it were proved that Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke did give in a Paper at Oxford, which had in it thoſe words and expreſſions which the Lord Savile noted to be in the King's Anſwer. That he had not heard any ſuch thing proved; and then he thought the Obſervations of the Lord Savile upon the King's Anſwer, to be to little purpoſe.

Others deſired to know how the Lord Savile, being in thoſe ſecret Councils at Oxford, ſhould become ſo well affected, as he pretended himſelf to be to the Parliament.

He anſwered, That he was impeached at Oxford, for ſomething that he ſpoke at thoſe Meetings with Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke; and that they met more than once at the Earl of Lindſey's Chamber. To which we made no anſwer.

Then the Lord Savile deſired, that Mr. Hollis would produce a Letter which he brought to him from the Duke of Richmond from Oxford, by which he believed, much of this buſineſs would appear. But it was returned upon the Lord Savile, that even then when he came into the Parliament, he confeſſed he was imployed to bring Letters, and a correſpondence from the Parliament's Enemies to this place.

Mr. Hollis ſaid little to this Letter, and I ſuppoſe (and partly know) that ſuch a Letter was delivered to him by the Lord Savile from the Duke of Richmond.

Mr. Gordon at this Committee acknowledgeth, that the Letter and Paper was brought to him by the Lady Temple, who was the Meſſenger and Agent of the Lord Savile; and that the Lord Say was acquainted with it before the Letter was delivered; and that Sir Nathaniel Barnadiſton, and Sir Henry Vane junior were likewiſe acquainted with it, and wiſhed him to offer the Letter.

That he ſaid the Houſe would be in a grand Committee, and then he could not offer the Letter. They replied, that they would call the Speaker to the Chair purpoſely to receive the Letter.

That none but theſe knew Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke to be the perſons charged with having Intelligence with the King's Party; but only he told others in the general, That he had an Impeachment to deliver againſt two Members of the Houſe, but did not name them to any others.

9. Order for a Letter of Thanks to Coventry, for ſending plenty of Proviſions to Sir Thomas Fairfax's Army.

Much time was ſpent about Ordinances for raiſing Money for the Scots Army.

10. The Sheriffs and divers of the Militia of London, and of the adjacent Counties, came to the Houſe with a Petition and Propoſals to the Houſe, for raiſing of 500 Horſe, and money to pay them out of Delinquents Eſtates; for the which London.

The

Anno 1645. the Houſe gave them thanks, and ordered a Committee to treat further with them upon theſe Propoſals.

Debate about Supplies for Ireland, and particularly for the Province of Munſter, referred to the Committee of Lords and Commons for Ireland; and to the Committee of Accounts to ſtate the former Charges for that Kingdom.

Hollis and Whitelocke. The Committee for the Lord Savile's buſineſs ſat again this Afternoon, and Mr. Hollis and I offered to make a Narrative to the Committee for their ſatisfaction, and to anſwer any Queſtions which ſhould be asked of us by any of the Committee.

Then Mr. Browne the Chairman moved the Committee, whether it were not fit, that as Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke were preſent, when the Lord Savile was heard; ſo now the Lord Savile ſhould be preſent, when Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke made their Narrative.

This held not much debate, it being judged by moſt of the Gentlemen there preſent, to be improper and unfit, and moved by the Chairman in too much favour to the Lord Savile.

It was then taken into debate, whether Mr. Hollis, and Mr. Whitelocke ſhould be heard ſpeak by way of Narrative, or whether they ſhould be examined as to a Charge; and it was over-ruled, that they ſhould be heard by way of Narrative.

Then Sir Peter Wentworth moved, that whilſt the one of us was making our Narrative, the other might withdraw; and that we ſhould not both be preſent together to hear what one another affirmed or denied. But this was not regarded.

Mr. Hollis began firſt, and made his Narrative, and after he had done, I ſpake, and both our Narratives were the ſame in effect with what we had ſpoken before in the Houſe, and we denied ſome of my Lord Savile's Informations which were not true; and he had no proof but his own honour (which was not in much eſteem) of moſt of them.

11. Debate of the Deſire of the Scots Army, to have Commiſſioners of the Parliament to reſide with them; which was agreed: and a Meſſage ſent to the Lords to name thoſe of their Houſe who ſhould be of this Committee.

Debate about the Ordinance for ſale of Delinquents Eſtates.

Order for the Committee of the Navy to ſend two Barks to Weymouth for the ſafety of the Fiſhermen in thoſe parts, whom the Clubmen had injured.

The Committee for the Lord Savile's Buſineſs ſat not this Day.

Some Friends who founded the Sollicitor St. John, and the other great Men of this Committee, told me that they found them not ſo ſharp againſt me, as againſt Mr. Hollis, whom they were reſolved to ruin if they could: But I being ſo much involved in this Buſineſs with him, they could not ſeparate us, but either both or neither muſt be ruined.

We prepared accordingly for our Defence, and although many private Meſſages were ſent to me (and private Conferences with me) that if I would deſert Mr. Hollis, and diſcover what I could ſay againſt him, that I ſhould not only be preſerved, but be rewarded and preferred, yet they could not prevail with me to confeſs any thing againſt Mr. Hollis, or the Truſt of Friendſhip wherein I my ſelf engaged.

An Ordinance read for raiſing a 1000 Horſe, and 500 Dragoons, and Money for them in aſſociated Counties.

Martial Law. The Committee of Kent, who had Power of Martial Law, gave Judgment of Death againſt 30, who were in the late Inſurrection there, yet ordered that they ſhould throw the Dice for their Lives, and but four of them to be executed; only two who refuſed to throw the Dice, were order'd to be executed. 21 Car.

The Houſe ſat in the Afternoon, and a Meſſenger brought them this Relation from Sir Thomas Fairfax's Army.

That Goring with his whole Army being quartered at Langport, expecting more Forces from the King to join with him, Sir Thomas Fairfax having notice thereof, called a Council of War, whoſe Reſult was, to give battle to the Enemy, if they could force them to it. Fairfax. Langport Fight.

That accordingly they advanced in ſeveral Bodies; Lieutenant General Maſſey with his Brigade of 4000 Horſe, and about 7 or 8 Foot Regiments, advanced in the Rear of Goring's Army, fell on a Party of them, took many Colours, about 200 Priſoners, and more Horſe, but few in this Service were ſlain. Goring.

Sir Thomas Fairfax by that time was advanced near Goring's head Quarters at Langport; not knowing of Maſſey's Engagement, was quartered on the other ſide of the River.

July 10 Sir Thomas Fairfax very early drew out with ſeven Regiments of Horſe, and moſt part of his Foot into the Field near Sutton. Goring perceiving this, poſſeſſed himſelf of a Paſs which lay between Sir Thomas Fairfax and Maſſey, and hindred the Conjunction of their Forces; not above four a breaſt being able to march through the Lane, in which the Enemy had lined the Hedges with Muſqueteers.

By this they intended to bring off their Ordnance and Carriages, and to make an honourable Retreat to Bridgewater: But upon the firing of Sir Thomas Fairfax's Foot, they beat off Goring's Foot from the Hedges, whereby Fairfax's Horſe might advance.

Major Bethel with a ſingle Troop entred the Paſſage, the reſt of the Horſe following him, and gallantly charged the whole Body of Goring's Horſe who were in the Lane, and as gallantly received him; but he routed their firſt Party, then their Reſerve, and ſo retreated to the Body. Bethel.

After this Colonel Desborough with about 300 Horſe of Sir Thomas Fairfax's Regiment, charged Goring's Horſe, and after a ſhort, but hot Engagement, wherein both Parties did very gallantly, Goring's Horſe were routed and put to Flight, and purſued almoſt to Bridgewater. Desborough

There were about 400 ſlain on both ſides, 2000 Priſoners taken by Sir Thomas Fairfax, 1200 Horſe, and about 40 Colours, 4000 Arms, two Pieces of Ordnance, ſix Carriages with Ammunition, Major General Porter next in Command to Goring, and with him 100 Officers were taken. Major General Porter.

After this good News, they went in the better Humour to the Committee of the Lord Savile, where Mr. Hollis and I had procured the Earl of Denbigh to come, and deſired that he (being one of the Commiſſioners with us at Oxford) would be pleaſed to declare his Knowledge concerning the Matters in queſtion before the Committee. Hollis and Whitelocke.

The Earl of Denbigh then told the Committee, that he was deſired by us to be there, and had leave of the Houſe of Peers to be at this Committee, and would acquaint them upon his Honour with the Truth of what he knew in this Buſineſs. Earl of Denbigh.

He told them that he did well remember that at their firſt coming to Oxford, there was care taken by them, for their Carriage and Diſcourſe there, that they were ſo punctual that he read the Propoſitions before-hand, that there might be no miſtaking.

That it was reſolved as a thing of Ceremony and Reſpect, that they ſhould make viſits, but not to any of thoſe who were excepted Perſons; and to refuſe them, being in the Enemies Quarters, they thought not fit.

That they agreed, that by way of Diſcourſe, they ſhould endeavour all they could, that the Propoſitions might be granted in General, that the King ſhould allow them the Title of Parliament; next the Government and Settlement of the Church; and laſtly, the Militia.

That they did agree that in all their Diſcourſes, this ſhould be the ſubject Matter; and that they ſhould preſs the obtaining of them.

That Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke did acquaint the Committee, that they had an intention to viſit the Earl of Lindſey, and he thinks the Earl of Southampton; and very ſuddenly after they did acquaint them that they had been there, and of a long Diſcourſe which they had together.

That to ſay particularly what the Diſcourſe was, he could not charge his Memory, but in general, it was the Diſcourſe that paſt at that meeting.

That he remembers but one Viſit they ſpake of, and it was a part of their Agreement to acquaint one another with all the circumſtances of their Viſits: That the Earl of Lindſey and the Earl of Southampton, and he thinks, the Lord Savile were named by Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke, to have been at that Meeting.

That he was told by them among other things, that they had little hopes, that they ſhould have ſatisfaction in their deſires.

That he doth not remember any mention of a Paper given in by them to the Earl of Lindſey.

That the Intelligence they had there was various; ſome had hopes of a good Iſſue of the Buſineſs, others had not: That Mr. Pierpoint had ill relations of the Commiſſioners to their diſparagement: And at the Conference with Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke, there were very ill Characters given of them.

He deſired that nothing might be taken as poſitive, from him concerning Perſons.

After the Earl of Denbigh, the Lord Wenman told the Committee, That there was an Agreement among the Commiſſioners of the Parliament at Oxford, as the Earl of Denbigh had related it, to pay Civilities and Viſits to thoſe that were civil to them, but not to any who were excepted in the Propoſitions from Pardon.

That he remembers not whether they did agree to preſs the granting of the Propoſitions any of them more than the others, only by Diſcourſe among themſelves, that they ſhould preſs thoſe that were of moſt difficulty to be granted.

That they were acquainted by Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke, with their viſiting of the Earl of Lindſey. That to his beſt remembrance they ſaid, the Earl of Southampton, and the Lord Savile were there, and mentioned the particulars of their Diſcourſe, but he did not remember them; nor that they acquainted them with any hopes they had of having the Propoſitions granted.

He remembred that Mr. Hollis ſaid a little before their coming out of Town, that he had a Paper again, which he ſpake publickly.

That in their Diſcourſe they did inſiſt principally (and they found it was thought fit to do ſo) upon the Propoſitions concerning Religion, and the Militia, and he did think that the Earl of Lindſey was ſpoken of, when Mr. Hollis ſaid that he had a Paper again.

That he and Mr. Whitelocke were coming by All Souls College, and he intended to viſit Sir Thomas Aylesbury, but hearing that Sir Edward Hyde was there, who was a Perſon excepted, Mr. Whitelocke did forbear to go in thither. 21 Car.

Others of the Commiſſioners who were at Oxford with the Propoſitions did declare themſelves to the ſame effect, that the Earl of Denbigh and the Lord Wenman had done, and ſo the Committee roſe.

Blaſphemy. 14. The Aſſembly preſented to the Houſe a Book which they had examined, full of Blaſphemies, and Hereſies, but that ſince the Printing of it the Author was dead; and they deſired the Houſe would put ſome publick Example of Juſtice upon it.

The Houſe referred to the Committee of Examinations to find out the Printer of this Book to be proceeded againſt according to Juſtice, and ordered that all the Books ſhould be brought in by the Bookſellers, and be burnt by the Hangman, and they gave Thanks to the Aſſembly for their care in this Buſineſs.

A Liſt was ſent to the Parliament of the Perſons ſlain, and taken by Sir Thomas Fairfax at the Battle of Langport, of Goring's part, 2 Quarter Maſters General, 60 other Officers, and 200 Soldiers ſlain, and 100 drowned, Goring, Sir Thomas Aſton and others wounded. Langport Particulars.

Priſoners taken, the Lieutenant General of their Ordnance, 3 Colonels, 40 other Officers, and 1900 Soldiers, and 2000 Horſe, 31 Cornets of Horſe, 20 Colours of Foot, 4000 Arms, 2 Field Pieces, and 3 Loads of Ammunition.

Of Sir Thomas Fairfax's part were ſlain 2 Reformado Captains, a Captain Lieutenant, and about 50 Soldiers, Colonel Cooke, Major Bethel, and about 16 of his Troop wounded.

Thankſgiving. A Day of Thankſgiving ordered to be kept for the Victory at Langport, and the Miniſters deſired to remember the goodneſs of God in preſerving this City from the Plague.

A Collection ordered to be on that Day for the poor plundered People of the Weſt.

Sir William Ermine, and Mr. Berwis, two Members of the Houſe, who had been Commiſſioners in the North, had the Thanks of the Houſe for their good Service there.

Major General Poyntz met with a Party of the King's from Sandall Caſtle, killed three of them, and took 16 of them Priſoners.

Hollis and Whitelocke. The Scots Commiſſioners here gave notice to Mr. Hollis and me by our Friends, that they had certain intercepted Papers and Letters of the Lord Savile's, which he was ſending to Oxford; and the chief Scope and End of them, was to be informed from thence, whether Mr. Hollis or Mr. Whitelocke kept intelligence with the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Lindſey, or any others of the King's Party, that he might have the more whereof to accuſe us here

It was thought fit by our Friends that the Scots Commiſſioners ſhould be deſired to acquaint the Houſe of Commons, with the Papers; upon which it ſhould be moved there, to refer them to the Committee for the Lord Savile's Buſineſs; and the ſame was done accordingly.

This Afternoon that Committee met, and theſe Papers were brought unto them, by the Lord Wareſton and another of the Scots Commiſſioners with a Compliment expreſſing their deſire to ſerve the Parliament in any thing within their Knowledge and Power.

The Papers being read to the effect before mentioned, the Lord Savile was called in, and the Papers ſhewed to him, and he owned them to be his Hand.

Being

Anno 1645.

Being asked what Warrant he had to hold Intelligence with the King's Party at Oxford, he being now within the Parliament's Quarters, and come in to them.

He anſwered, That he was authorized to do this by the Sub-committee for private and ſecret Intelligence for the Committee of both Kingdoms.

Being again asked who of that Sub-committee by name did know of this his Deſign, and did authorize him to ſend to Oxford about it. He anſwered, That the Lord Say was from time to time acquainted with this Buſineſs, and did encourage and authorize him to ſend to Oxford about it, and that he ſent ſeveral times by Mr. Howard to Oxford, with much to the ſame Effect.

By this our Friends found the bottom of this Deſign againſt us, to be from the advice, if not contrivance of the Lord Say: and the Lady Temple a buſy Woman, and great Politician in her own Opinion, was made uſe of by the Lord Say to whom ſhe was allied, and by the Lord Savile, to be an Agent in this Matter.

The Deſign and Endeavour alſo againſt us, was by theſe Papers and Examinations made the more apparent, which took off the edge of divers Gentlemen who thought this Proſecution, not ingenious, nor handſome againſt us.

Our Friends made good uſe of it, both at the Committee and afterwards in the Houſe, and carried it by vote to have theſe particulars with the reſt of the Examinations reported to the Parliament.

15. A Meſſage from the Lords to the Commons, about removal of the Lord Powis a Priſoner to London, and for an allowance for him.

An Ordinance committed for impowering the Militia of London to raiſe Horſe and Dragoons for the Counties of Berks, Bucks and Oxon.

Major Harriſon ſent from Sir Thomas Fairfax to the Parliament, gave them a particular and large account of the Battle of Langport, the Commons gave 200 l. to Major Bethel as a Gratuity for his Service there, and ordered two good Horſes for Major Harriſon, and a Letter of hearty Thanks to Sir Thomas Fairfax.

Langport.

Petition from Hertfordſhire of their Grievances referred.

Sir Thomas Fairfax ſummoned Bridgewater, but the Governor Colonel Windham gave a reſolute denial, whereupon Sir Thomas Fairfax prepared to ſtorm.

About 800 of the Priſoners taken at Langport Fight, took the Covenant, and entred into the Parliament's Service.

Sir Thomas Fairfax went to a Rendevous of the Clubmen, about 2000 of them, and propounded that they ſhould not ſupply Bridgewater; that what his Army had of them ſhould be paid for, and no wrong done to any of them, by any of his Forces; but upon complaint againſt any Officer or Soldier under his Command, that Right ſhould be done.

Clubmen.

16. Major General Skippon brought to London.

Buſineſs of the Church debated in a grand Committee, and about Inſtructions for the Commiſſioners to be ſent to reſide in the Scots Army.

Referred to the Committee of both Houſes for Ireland, to take care for ſending thither thoſe Priſoners who were willing to fight againſt the Iriſh Rebels, and for the Supplies for Munſter; but thoſe Priſoners who had formerly ſerved the Parliament, or were meer Iriſh were committed to cloſe Cuſtody to be proceeded againſt according to Juſtice.

An Ordinance ſent up to the Lords for making one Mr. Reynolds Deputy Clark of the Hanaper with the Salary of 50 l. per Annum, and the Profits of the Place to go to the uſe of the Publick. 21 Car.

17. The Ordinance for the Clark of the Hanaper, and for Forces for Oxon, Bucks, and Berks ſent to the Lords.

Care for the Charge of the Funeral of the Counteſs of Dorſet. Counteſs of Dorſet.

Sir Thomas Fairfax took in Borrowes a Fort of the King's four Miles from Bridgewater, in which were 140 Men, of whom 80 took the Covenant to ſerve the Parliament, and the reſt of them marched away.

The Report was made to the Houſe about the Lord Savile's Buſineſs, and it was moved that there might be a farther Examination of Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke in the Houſe; and that any Member might have liberty to ask them what Queſtions they pleaſed, which the Houſe ordered, and that we ſhould be ſeverally examined, and to begin with Mr. Hollis. Hollis and Whitelocke.

I ſat ſtill in my Place, and it was moved that I might be ordered to withdraw, whilſt Mr. Hollis was in Examination, but that was oppoſed as contrary to the Privilege of the Houſe, that there being no legal Charge againſt us, we ought to have the ſame liberty and freedom of ſitting in the Houſe as the other Members had, and neither of us to be ordered to withdraw. Privilege.

After much Debate upon this Point, it was brought to the Queſtion, whether Mr. Whitelocke ſhould be ordered to withdraw, whilſt Mr. Hollis was under the Examination of the Houſe, and it was carried in the Negative, that I ſhould not withdraw.

This Queſtion being paſt, I ſtood up and told the Speaker, That ſince the Houſe had done me that Juſtice and Favour, and themſelves that Right, in the Conſequence thereof, yet now to manifeſt the Confidence I had in my own Innocency, and that I ſought no Advantages for my own Vindication in this Buſineſs, I ſhould of my ſelf, with their leave withdraw, whilſt the Houſe ſhould be in the Examination of Mr. Hollis.

Then I did withdraw, and went up to the Committee Chamber, at which the Houſe ſeemed to give a good approbation.

Mr. Hollis was almoſt two Hours under examination in the Houſe, there being ſome particulars urged againſt him, which were not againſt me, particularly in the matter of Intelligence and Correſpondence with the King's Party.

The Queſtions and Matters upon which he was examined, were in effect but the ſame, which had been formerly mentioned in the Houſe, and at the Committee, to which he anſwered fully, and prudently, and with great Courage; and when they had ſifted the Buſineſs as much as they could with him, they gave him over, and ſent for me down out of the Committee Chamber to be examined.

I came unto the Houſe, and then Mr. Hollis withdrew of himſelf into the Committee Chamber, whilſt I was under Examination.

A multitude of Queſtions were demanded of me, inſomuch as one Gentleman Sir Peter Wentworth asked me above thirty Queſtions only for his part.

The Matters demanded of me were but the ſame in effect that had been mentioned formerly,

and

Anno 1645. and what I anſwered did agree punctually with what Mr. Hollis had ſaid before.

It is a very ſolemn thing to be examined by a Houſe of Commons, where there are ſo many Wits, and ſo much odds and advantage to be taken againſt one ſingle Man; and that in a Buſineſs of High Treaſon, where Honour, Fortune and Life are at ſtake.

The Houſe ſat upon this Buſineſs till 7 a Clock at Night, the Earl of Eſſex's Party, and all our Friends putting forth the utmoſt of their Power and Intereſt to reſcue us from the Malice and Danger we were now under.

And the other Party of the Houſe as earneſtly labouring to be rid of us both; either by cutting off our Heads, or at leaſt by expelling of us from being any more Members of Parliament.

They were ſo eager upon it, that they ordered to reſume the Debate of this Buſineſs the next Morning.

18. The Lords ſent their concurring to the Ordinance for Commiſſioners to reſide in the Scots Army; and to ſome ſmall Amendments made by their Lordſhips the Commons aſſented, and the Commiſſioners were required to repair with all convenient Speed to the Scots Army in England.

Power given to the Northern Committee to ſequeſter malignant Miniſters.

The Houſe proceeded upon the Report of the Lord Savile's Buſineſs, and paſt a Vote, That the ſame was ripe for Judgment, and ordered, that they would proceed to Judgment thereupon to-morrow Morning.

They likewiſe ordered that the Buſineſs concerning Mr. Cranford, a Miniſter of the City, in relation to ſeveral Members of the Houſe ſhould be reported to the Houſe, and proceeded in with the Lord Savile's Buſineſs to-morrow Morning.

19. An Order for charging the Ordinance for Sale of Delinquents Eſtates with 1000 l. for Manchester Garriſon.

Fairfax. Sir Thomas Fairfax ſat down before Bridgewater, he went the ſecond time to the Clubmen, and offered them ſo fair Conditions, that moſt of them departed to their Habitations, and many of them came into the Leaguer to ſerve the Parliament, the chief Gunner in Bridgewater revolted from them and came to Sir Thomas Fairfax.

The Houſe fell upon the Buſineſs of Mr. Cranford, and voted That the words ſpoken, and reported by him, againſt ſome Members of the Houſe of Commons, and of the Committee of both Kingdoms, that they kept Intelligence with the King's Party, and were falſe to the Parliament, were falſe and ſcandalous.

Mr. Cranford. That Mr. Cranford at a full Exchange in London, and at Weſtminſter, ſhould confeſs the wrong he had done them in ſo ſcandalizing of them.

That he ſhould pay 500 l. to each of thoſe 4 Members for their Damages.

That he ſhould be committed to the Tower during the Pleaſure of the Houſe.

Then the Houſe proceeded in the Lord Savile's Buſineſs, and after a long Debate, upon the reſult, paſſed a Vote.

Hollis and Whitelocke. That Mr. Hollis was not Guilty of holding Intelligence with the Enemy, as was pretended, and they did fully acquit him thereof.

This gave good Encouragement to Mr. Hollis, and me, and to all our Friends, who would fain have brought on the reſt of this Buſineſs, but that it was almoſt 9 a Clock at Night, and therefore too late to proceed farther in it this Day.

The other Party, our Adverſaries would have declined any farther Proceedings of the Houſe in this Buſineſs at this time, hoping in time to get ſome farther Evidence againſt us, and then to revive it; and doubting as the preſent Conſtitution of the Houſe was, that Mr. Hollis and I might be acquitted. 21 Car.

We preſſed the more earneſtly to bring the Buſineſs to a final Determnation, whilſt our Friends were in Town, and the Houſe fully poſſeſt of the Buſineſs, and in ſo good a Conſtitution and Humour for us, and we deſired not to continue under a Cloud, and the various diſcourſes of People, not to be kept lingring but to know our Doom, either of Condemnation or Acquittal.

Our Friends at laſt with much Earneſtneſs, and againſt great Oppoſition and Debate carried it by Vote, to have it ordered, that the Lord Savile's Buſineſs ſhould be reſumed on Monday Morning.

21. The Houſe of Commons according to their Order, reſumed the Debate of the Lord Savile's Buſineſs, and after a long and warm diſcuſſing of all the particulars, and Arguments relating to it, they at length upon the Queſtion, paſſed a Vote to this Effect.

That it not appearing, that Mr. Hollis and Mr. Whitelocke, had done any diſſervice in their Proceedings at Oxford, that therefore the remainder and whole Matter of this Report ſhould be laid aſide, and not to be farther proceeded in.

And that the ſaid Mr. Hollis, and Mr. Whitelocke, ſhould have liberty to proſecute (if they pleaſe) the Lord Savile now Priſoner in the Tower for damages.

I abſented myſelf from the Houſe when they came to give their Judgment.

It was obſerved, that generally the Gentlemen of beſt Intereſt and Quality in the Houſe, were all for the Acquittal of us, and that it had ſcarcely been ſeen before in any other Buſineſs, that this holding ſo many Days together, yet even the Gallants who uſed, whatever Buſineſs was in Agitation, to go forth to Dinner, and to ſome other of their Refreſhments, yet they attended conſtantly all the time that this Buſineſs was in Debate, and would not ſtir from it.

The Houſe proceeded in other Buſineſſes, and ordered an Ordinance to be drawn, for Execution of Martial Law, within the Lines of Communication. Martial Law.

An Ordinance paſt the Commons for Moneys for Proviſions of Stores.

The Ordinance paſt for Commiſſioners to go to the Parliament of Scotland.

A Petition from ſome of Cheſhire, deſiring aſſiſtance for the taking in of Weſt-Cheſter; The Petitioners had Thanks for their good Affections, and the Buſineſs was referred to the Committee of both Kingdoms.

Letters from Sir Thomas Fairfax informed, that they had beſieged Bridgewater, which was ſtrongly fortified, having about 30 Pieces of Ordnance, and deep Trenches. Sir Thomas Fairfax.

That the Governor and his Son, Sir Hugh Windham, Sir John Digby, Sir Francis Courtney, Mr. Elliot, that carried the Great Seal to Oxford, and divers others of Quality, were within the Town.

That two of the Parliament's Ships about Holmes, had taken 16 Welſh Barks, which were to tranſport Soldiers.

That the Clubmen had beaten back, about 600 Welſh and Iriſh, that would have landed. that they had taken ſeveral Veſſels loaden with Corn and Cloth. Clubmen.

Anno 1645.

That G. Goring, with Greenville, were come to Barnſtable, with about 5000 Horſe and Foot.

That Prince Charles, the Lord Hopton, and Lord Wentworth, were gone to raiſe the Country in Cornwal, and probably would raiſe the Siege before Plymouth.

A Party of the King's Forces from Newark, having laid their Deſign, ſurprized Welbeck Houſe, betrayed to them by ſome of the Parliament's Forces there.

The General being informed, that they within the Town had ſtore of Victuals, and that it would be a long work to continue the Siege of it, he again moved to ſtorm it, which was unanimouſly aſſented unto; and the Lord's day before, Mr. Peters, and Mr. Boles, in their Sermons encouraged the Soldiers to the Work. 21 Car. Bridgewater ſtormed.

About 7 at Night the Foot being drawn out, and thoſe that commanded the Storm and Forlorn; Mr. Peters, in the Field, gave them an Exhortation to do their Duties.

July 21, about two a Clock, the General's Regiment began the Storm, ſeconded by others, and gave not over, till they were at the top of the Works with their Colours, and gained the Pieces that played upon them, and let down the Bridge.

Whereupon Captain Reynolds, a valiant young Gentleman, entered with a forlorn hope of Horſe, ſcoured the Streets, and beat them out of the hither Town into the farther, and the Pikes ſtood bravely to the Horſe.

This perplexed the Enemy, and the Aſſailants brought away with them 500 Priſoners, the Enemy for fear, left all the Line on the other Side, where Colonel Maſſey was to ſtorm; but there wanting ſome Preparations, he only gave them a hot Alarm on that Side.

That they loſt but 20 Men, although in likelihood, they might have loſt 1000 in the Storm, and not one Officer of Note ſlain, though many of them led on their Men in Perſon, as Lieutenant Colonel Jackſon, Colonel Hewſon, and others.

The Enemy was ſo far from yielding, that with Granadoes and other things they fired that part of the Town, where the Parliament's Forces were, not leaving three Houſes there ſtanding, which ſo exaſperated Sir Thomas Fairfax, and his Men, that he ſent in the Evening another Summons to them by a Trumpet.

But they within peremptorily refuſed to treat, whereupon the General commanded the Town to be ſtormed on Colonel Maſſey's Side the next Morning.

July 22, at the dawning of the Day, the General in Perſon gave order for the Forces on this Side to give a fierce Alarm, with great and ſmall Shot, whilſt they on the other Side fell on, which was done with great Reſolution, and probably they might have gained the Town, had not the Tide come up.

They on the other Side again failing to fall on, only gave an Alarm, ſomething being wanting for the Storm; but this hot Alarm working nothing upon them, Sir Thomas Fairfax was ſo enraged, that he ſent a Trumpet to the Governor, to let all the Women and Children come forth of the Town, by four a Clock in the Afternoon.

Accordingly the Governor's Lady, the Lady Hawley, Mrs. Marre, and divers others came forth, and then Sir Thomas Fairfax, with great Guns, Mortar-pieces, Fire-balls, hot Irons, &c. played againſt the Town, and fired it in three Places, the Wind being great increaſed the Fire, and the huge Flame ſo terrified them, that Mr. Elliot came runing out to Sir Thomas Fairfax for a Parley.

He anſwered, That the Governor refuſed it the laſt Night, and now that he had brought this Miſery upon himſelf; Sir Thomas Fairfax would not admit of a Treaty, yet if he would ſubmit to Mercy he ſhould have it. In the mean time, till Mr. Elliot returned a ſpeedy and poſitive Anſwer, Sir Thomas Fairfax told him, that if any Soldier in the Town, offered to take off a Slate on the Houſe, or to quench

Anno 1645. quench the Fire (and his Soldiers cried) the Ceſſation ſhould be void, and they would then take all Advantages.

This ſo amazed them in the Town, that inſtantly they came out and cried, Mercy for the Lord's ſake, ſo it was agreed, and they had Quarter for their Lives, and Liberty to ſave the Town.

There were left for the Parliament, 40 Pieces of Ordnance, 4000 weight of Match, Powder proportionable, Victuals for 2000 Soldiers for four Months, 1000 Priſoners now taken, beſides the 500 the other Day. Particulars.

Church Affairs. 3. The Houſe fell into the Debate of the great Buſineſs of the Church, the points of Excommunication, and Suſpenſion from the Sacrament, which Power the Presbyterians long'd for.

Selden. Selden declared his Opinion.

That for 4000 Tears, there was no ſign of any Law, to ſuſpend Perſons from Religious Exerciſes.

That under the Law, every Sinner was eo nomine, to come to offer, as he was a Sinner: And no Prieſt, or other Authority had to do with him, unleſs it might be made appear to them, whether another did repent or not, which was hard to be done.

Strangers were kept away from the Paſſover, but they were Pagans, and ſuch as were not of the Jewiſh Religion; The Queſtion is not now for keeping away Pagans in times of Chriſtianity, but Proteſtants from Proteſtant Worſhip. No Divine can ſhew that there is any ſuch Command as this, to ſuſpend from the Sacrament.

If after Chriſt ſuffered, the Jews had become Chriſtians, the ſame ground upon which they went as to their Sacrifices, would have been as to the Sacrament: And certainly, no way nor Command to keep any one from partaking of it.

No Man is kept from the Sacrament, eo nomine, becauſe he is guilty of any Sin, by the Conſtitution of the reformed Churches, or becauſe he hath not made ſatisfaction.

Every man is a Sinner, the difference is only, the one is in private, and the other a Sinner in publick. The one is as much againſt God, as the other.

Dic Eccleſiæ, in St. Matthew, was the Courts of Law, which then ſat in Jeruſalem. No Man can ſhew any Excommunication till the Popes, Victor & Zephorius (200 Years after Chriſt) firſt began to uſe it upon private Quarrels: thereby Excommunication is but human Invention; it was taken from the Heathen. 21 Car.

I ſpake to this Effect.

Mr. Speaker.

The Aſſembly of Divines, have petitioned and adviſed the Houſe of Commons, that in every Presbytery or Presbyterian Congregation, the Paſtors and ruling Elders, may have the power of Excommunication, and the Power of ſuſpending ſuch as they ſhall judge ignorant or ſcandalous Perſons from the Sacrament.

By Paſtors, I ſuppoſe they mean themſelves, and others who are or may be Preachers in the ſeveral Congregations, and would be Επισκοποι, Biſhops or Overſeers of thoſe Congregations.

By Ruling Elders, I take their meaning to be a ſelect number of ſuch as in every one of thoſe Congregations ſhall be choſen for the Execution of the Church Government, and Diſcipline in them reſpectively.

They may properly enough be called Paſtors from our Saviour's charge to his Diſciples, paſce oves meas, feed my Sheep, ſo that a Paſtor is to feed thoſe committed to his charge, with ſpiritual Food, as the Shepherd feeds his Flock with temporal: if ſo, how improper then will it be for thoſe who are to feed the Flock to deſire the Power to Excommunicate any, to keep them from Food, to ſuſpend any from the Sacrament, to drive them from feeding on the Bread of Life, to forbid any to eat of that whereof Chriſt the great Shepherd of our Souls hath ſaid, take, eat, &c.

To forbid thoſe to drink whom they ſhall judge unworthy, when our Saviour himſelf ſaid, drink ye all of this, and St. Mark, chap. 14. ſaith, and they all drank of the Cup.

In the Old Teſtament, Ho every one that thirſteth come ye to the Waters, and he that hath no Money, come ye buy and eat, yea come buy Wine and Milk without money and without Price, ſaid the Prophet Iſaiah; yet now his Succeſſors would be authoriſed to ſay to ſome Perſons, you do not thirſt, though themſelves ſay they do, and to deny them Milk and Water, Bread and Wine, when they deſire it.

Surely it is not proper for Paſtors, for feeders of Flocks to deny food to any of their Flock who ſhall deſire it.

But ſome have ſaid, that it is the part of a good Shepherd if he ſee one of his Sheep going aſtray into a Ground where the Graſs will bring the Rot, to chace him out of that Paſture. And they apply it to ſpiritual Paſtors, ſuſpending thoſe from the Sacrament whom they fear by the unworthy receiving of it may eat and drink their own Damnation.

This may be a charitable Simile, but will hardly be found a full Anſwer, for it is not the receiving of the Sacrament, but the unworthineſs of the Receiver that brings deſtruction. And whether he be unworthy or not, it is not in the Judgment of Paſtor, or of any other, but of the Party only who is the Sinner, for none can know his Heart but himſelf, and a Commiſſion will ſcarce be produced for any other to be judge thereof. The Perſon refuſed may ſay to the Paſtor in this Caſe quis conſtituit te judicem?

Beſides the Authority deſired is not only of Suſpenſion, but of Excommunication which is a total driving, or thundring away of the Party from all ſpiritual Food whatſoever. And if a Shepherd ſhall chace away his Sheep from all Paſtures, that indeed will bring the Hunger-rot upon them.

The more ſinful Perſons are, the more they have need of Inſtruction; and where can they have it better than from the lips of the learned and pious Paſtors, which ought to preſerve Knowledge.

But it hath been ſaid that the Ruling Elders are to join with them, let us enquire who they are, in ſome Congregations in Country Villages, perhaps they may not be very learned themſelves; yet the Authority to be given them is ſufficiently great.

The word Elders amongſt the Hebrews ſignified the Men of greateſt Power and Dignity: The Members of their great Sanhedrim were ſtyled Elders, ſo were the Princes of their Tribes.

The Grecians had the appellation in like eſteem, πρεσβύτεροι which we tranſlate Elders, was given to their greateſt Men, and from thence is fetched the Name of Presbyters or Prieſts, Presbytery and Presbyterian Government.

The Phœnicians, Tyrians, and other particular Nations uſed the word Elder in the like Senſe, and ſtiled their Generals and Princes by the name of Elders.

The Romans did the like, their Senate and their Senators came all from Senes, Elders, and from them to this day the French, Spaniards, and Italians retain the Titles of Seigneur, Seigniori, Seniori and the like for their greateſt Men. And in England we give the name of Earls to our great Lords, from Elder, and to the King himſelf the Title of Sir, abſtracted from Seigneur an Elder.

In Towns they ſtill keep the Title of Aldermen, that is Eldermen for the Chief and Rulers of the Corporation: And ſo they may allow the Title of Elders to the chief and ſelect Men of every Presbytery.

Yet if this Power, Excommunication and Suſpenſion be allowed them, they may well challenge the Title of Elders in the higheſt ſignification.

The Power of the Keys is a great Power; The Romiſh Church will acknowledge it, and the foundation of their Supremacy to be built upon it. Whatſoever they bind or looſe on Earth to be bound or looſed in Heaven, is a Power which may claim the higheſt Title imaginable.

Although I can never preſume that the reverend and pious learned Gentlemen, who aim at this Power, can have the leaſt ſuppoſition of any ſuch Effect by it; yet if any Petitioners ſhould ſue to you to be made Judges or Juſtices, I believe you would judge their Petition the leſs modeſt, and them the leſs fit for ſuch Offices, but to this I make no Application, and I hope none ſhall make any uſe of it.

Power is thought fit to be given to ſuſpend from the Sacrament two ſorts of Perſons, the Ignorant and the Scandalous.

I am ſure that I am a very Ignorant Perſon, and I fear we are all more Ignorant than we ought to be of the Truth of Chriſt, and ſome more than others. And the moſt learned, I doubt may be called in the large Senſe Ignorant. Even amongſt the Paſtors and perhaps amongſt the Ruling Elders, in ſome places the moſt learned may in other places be adjudged Ignorant. 21 Car.

The more Ignorant People are, the more ſome will blame their Paſtors who ought to inſtruct them, and by private Conference inform them, and rectify their Underſtandings: And that is a good part of Spiritual Food. And to keep an Ignorant Perſon from the Ordinances, is no way to improve his Knowledge.

Scandalous Perſons are like to be ſuſpended; And who ſhall be ſaid Scandalous is to be referred to the judgment of the Paſtors and Ruling Elders: But where a Commiſſion is extant for them to execute this Judicature will be hard to ſhew.

Both Paſtors and Elders, and People are all Scandalous in the general Senſe. We are all of us groſs Sinners, and our beſt Performances are but Scandalous as to the true and ſincere profeſſion of the Goſpel of Chriſt.

Thoſe who are Scandalous Sinners ought to be admoniſhed to forſake their evil Ways, and to amend their Lives; and where can they receive this Admonition, and hope for more Conviction of their Conſciences, than by hearing good Sermons, and being admitted to be partakers of the holy Ordinances, but to Excommunicate them, deprives them wholly of the beſt means for their cure.

The beſt Excommunication is for Paſtors, Elders, and People to Excommunicate Sin out of their own Hearts, and Converſations: to Suſpend themſelves from all Works of Iniquity, this is a Power, which put in Execution, through the aſſiſtance of the Spirit of God, will prevent all Diſputes about Excommunication and Suſpenſion from the Sacrament.

A Man may be a good Phyſician though he never cut off a Member from any of his Patients, a Body may be very ſound though no Member of it was ever cut off. And ſurely a Church may be a good Church though no Member of it hath ever been cut off.

I have heard here many Complaints of the Juriſdiction formerly exerciſed by the Prelates who were but a few, there will be by the paſſing of this now deſired, a great multiplication of Spiritual Men in Government.

Where the Temporal Sword (the Magiſtracy) is ſufficient for puniſhment of Offences, there will be little need for this new Diſcipline; nor will it be ſo eaſily granted.

After a long Debate, the Houſe referred the Matter to a farther Conſideration by the grand Committee to whom it was formerly referred.

I omitted ſome things in my Argument which I thought might give moſt Offence, and how much further my Opinion, yet for that which I ſpake, I did not paſs uncenſured by the rigid Presbyterians, againſt whoſe Deſign I was held to be one, and they were pleaſed to term me a Diſciple of Selden, and an Eraſtian.

That the Forlorn of Colonel Butler's Troop being twelve, took twelve of the Lord Goring's Life-Guard, and twenty four Horſe; who being examined by Sir Thomas Fairfax, it appear'd that the Enemy was ignorant of Sir Thomas Fairfax's Motion.

That the Lord Hopton was in Torrington, and a Party of the Enemy at Burrington; the General ſent a Party of Horſe to meet with them under Captain Berry, who charged and put them to a Rout, ſhot Lieutenant Colonel Dundaſh, a Renegado of the Earl of Cleveland's Brigade, and took ſeveral Priſoners, left Dundaſh by the way, being mortally wounded. Hopton routed at Torrington.

That another Party of the Parliament's Horſe, towards the Eaſt, met with the Enemy, taking ſome Priſoners, and Horſe, and ſhot Major Bret; that by this time a Bridge was made, that the Parliament's Army might with Conveniency march over the River, but the Day being far ſpent, it was thought fit to march with the whole Army.

That three Regiments of Horſe and three of Foot marched towards the Enemy that Night, and next Morning Sir Thomas Fairfax came up to them, and near Torrington had a general Rendezvous of Horſe and Foot, drew them up in Battalia, and marched towards the Enemy.

That the Parliament's Forlorn of Horſe charged the Kings, and put them to retreat, but they came on again with a ſtrong Body, and put the Parliament's Forlorn to a ſtand, whoſe Reſerves, and ſome Foot coming up, they forced the Enemies Body again, purſued and alarmed them at Eſq; Roll's Houſe, within a mile of Torrington, where they began to fortify; but perceiving the Parliament's Foot coming up, they quitted the Houſe, and drew their Forces to Torrington, whither Sir Thomas Fairfax's Forlorn followed them.

The Enemy drew their Foot out of the Town into the Cloſes, the Parliament's Forlorn of Foot lined the Hedges, and ſo faced each other about two Hours, within half Muſket-ſhot, there was continual Anno 1645. continual Skirmiſhes between the Forlorns and Reſerves on both ſides, and ſome Priſoners taken, and by this time it began to be Night.

Sir Thomas Fairfax called his Council of War, whether to engage before Day or not, but they deferr'd the Reſolution, and the General, Lieutenant General, and the Colonel wrote to the Forlorn to ſee in what Poſture they were, and heard the Tattooe beat in the Town, which aſſured them that the Enemy was there, and not fled away as was reported.

But to be certain, ſix Dragoons were commanded to creep under a Bridge near the Barricadoes, and to give Fire, to ſee whether they would anſwer, by which it might be known whether they ſtood to defend the Town; they received the Charge, and anſwered it with a ſharp Volley of Shot.

The Parliament's Forlorn Hope ſeeing the Dragoons engaged, gave Fire, whereupon the Enemy gave Fire all along the Hedges and Works, and the Reſerve to the Forlorn came up to relieve them, and being ſo engaged the whole Army advanced, and about eight at Night the Battle began, about ſix Fields from the Town, and they fought from Hedge to Hedge till the Enemy were beaten into their Barricadoes.

Which they maintained for an Hour after very reſolutely, and often-times repulſed the Parliament's Forces, yet at laſt they got over the Barricadoes and forced the Enemy into the Town, whereupon the Horſe were let in, who ſcowring the Streets, were received by the Enemy, and a hot Charge given by both Parties.

Yet at laſt the Enemy was driven out of the Barricadoes at the fartheſt end of the Town, and by this time many Priſoners were taken by the Parliament's Forces and put into the Church, but far more eſcaped, being dark over the Hedges and By-ways, throwing down their Arms, and every Man flying ſeveral ways.

The Parliament's Forces were no ſooner poſſeſſed of the Town, but the Enemy's Magazine which they left in the Church was fired, whether on purpoſe by them, or by Accident is uncertain; but it proved a terrible Blow, blowing up the Church with all the Wood and Lead upon it, deforming many Houſes, killed ſome of the Priſoners in the Church, and ſome of the Parliament Soldiers in the Church-yard, two great Webs of Lead fell within twice a Horſe length of the General, many others were hurt with the Stones, Timber, and Lead.

Moſt of the Town was ſhaken by this Blow, being the terribleſt that hath been ſeen, there being above eighty Barrels of Powder blown up together.

The Enemy perceiving their Magazine thus on Fire gave one Charge more with their Horſe, commanded by Sir John Digby, but being fired upon by the Muſqueteers, they took their Farewell; the Parliament Horſe inſtantly advanced through the Town after them, and began the Purſuit about eleven at Night.

The Infantry were taken, ſlain, and totally routed; the Horſe, many taken and diſperſed, and the reſt gone in great diſorder towards Cornwall; they had eight Regiments of Horſe, two thouſand five hundred, or three thouſand Men, very reſolute, and fought valiantly, and after they were chaſed from Hedge to Hedge defended their Barricadoes and Works at Puſh of Pike, and the But-end of their Muſquets.

They were old Corniſh Foot, many of the Parliament's Men were wounded, Officers and Soldiers, more than hath been at any Storm ſince the Army came forth. 21 Car.

The Parliament's firſt Word was, Emmanuel, God with us, and a Furſe-buſh in their Hats; the Enemy's firſt Word was, We are with you, and a Handkerchief tied about their right Arm, they having gotten the Word and Signal of the Parliament's Army, they took a ſecond Word, which was Truth, and a Handkerchief or white Mark in their Hats.

The Particulars of this great Victory were not ready to be ſent up with theſe Letters.

I asked Leave of the Houſe to go into the Country, and from my own Houſe I went to wait on the General at the Leaguer before Oxford.

The General, Lieutenant General Cromwell, Ireton, Lambert, Fleetwood, and the reſt of the great Commanders there, uſed me with extraordinary Reſpect and Courteſy. The General admitted me to his Councils of War.

Sir Thomas Fairfax. The General was a Perſon of as meek and humble Carriage as ever I ſaw in great Employment, and but of few words in Diſcourſe, of Council; yet when his Judgment and Reaſon were ſatisfied, he was unalterable, except it were by Better, whereof (as was fit) he was the only Judge.

The Speaker acquainted me that he had received Letters from Sir Thomas Fairfax, wherein he made mention of me, full of Reſpect and Kindneſs

Anno 1646. Kindneſs towards me, and after Compliments of my Abilities and other Qualifications, and of my particular Knowledge of that Place and Country, he thought it would be for the Service of the Parliament, and it would be a great Contentment to himſelf, to have my Company and Advice at the Leaguer before Oxford, for which purpoſe he deſired the Speaker would move the Houſe to give me Leave to go down to the General, and this he deſired the rather, becauſe if there ſhould be Occaſion for Commiſſioners for a Treaty about the ſurrendring of Oxford, he would willingly have me to be one of his Commiſſioners. Upon my adviſing about this Buſineſs with the Speaker and others of his Friends, it was not held fit to acquaint the Houſe with this Letter concerning me, for that it would not be liked by ſome that I ſhould be a Commiſſioner for Sir Thomas Fairfax to treat with the Commiſſioners of Sir Thomas Glemham, about the Surrender of ſome particular Garriſons, when I had been employed as a Commiſſioner for the Parliament to treat with the King himſelf about the greateſt Affairs of the two Kingdoms; but they adviſed me to ask Leave of the Houſe generally to go into the Country, and being at my own Houſe it would be but a little Journey to go over to the General. He uſed me with extraordinary Reſpect and Courteſy, and adviſed with me in moſt of his Affairs, and upon my Intimations to Cromwell, with whom I was very intimately received, he took off the General from any Thoughts of employing me as a Commiſſioner, but he ſent for me to his Councils of War, and made uſe of my Advice in moſt of his Affairs of greateſt Conſequence.

But I have obſerved him at Councils of War, that he hath ſaid little, but hath ordered things expreſly contrary to the Judgment of all his Council; and in Action in the Field, I have ſeen him ſo highly tranſported, that ſcarce any one durſt ſpeak a Word to him, and he would ſeem more like a Man diſtracted, and furious, than of his ordinary Mildneſs, and ſo far different Temper.

Summons to Oxford. The General ſent a Summons to the Governor to ſurrender Oxford for the uſe of the Parliament, expreſſing his Unwillingneſs to do any thing of Damage to that famous Univerſity, and offering to them honourable Terms.

Sir Thomas Glemham the Governor deſired a ſafe Conduct for Sir John Mounſon and Mr. Philip Warwick to come to the General to ſpeak with him from Sir Thomas Glemham firſt, which was aſſented to, and the ſame Day a Summons was ſent to Wallingford, Boſtol, and Radcot.

Upon ſome private Conſultations with Mr. Hollis, Sir Philip Stapleton, Mr. Recorder Glyn, and others of that Party, who did eagerly put on the Buſineſs of disbanding the Army, I declared my Opinion againſt it, as that which might prove dangerous to them, and to all the Parliament Party if it ſhould ſucceed; and withal, that I believed the Army would not ſubmit to it, and ill Conſequences might follow, if the Votes paſſed for the doing of it.

But they ſtill both in private and in publick preſſed it, having taken a peek againſt the Army; themſelves, many of them, having been left out of it, by the Self-denying Ordinance; and yet Cromwell, Skippon, and other Members of the Houſe continued Officers of the Army, and their great Succeſs did increaſe the Envy againſt them.

They likewiſe apprehended the Advantage which they had in proſecuting this Buſineſs, as that which would generally pleaſe the People, by ridding them of the Soldiers, and eaſing them of the Taxes, and they would not conſider the Doubt of the Army's Mutiny and Diſobedience, being over reſolute in this Temper. The other Party took occaſion to have the more Converſe with Cromwell and that Party, who entertained me with all Reſpect and Affection, and highly courted me. And as I had told Mr. Hollis and his Party my Judgment in private, ſo I declared the ſame upon the Debate of this Buſineſs in the Houſe, which took very well and created an Intereſt for me with the other Party.

Yet it was obſerved that this was not upon Deſign or Policy in them to come off to a new Party, who might be thought more growing into Power than the other, but it was their clear Judgment.

But what they gained with the one Party, they loſt with the other, neither continuing firm to them, who were not thorow-paced in all things which they laboured to bring to paſs, but we ſhall find in all ſorts of Buſineſs, that Honeſty is the beſt Policy, and a clear and ſincere Dealing according to one's Judgment and Conſcience, is ſeldom without a Bleſſing accompanying of it.

Anno 1647. bleneſs of ſome aſperſions caſt upon them, as if they aimed more at private Emolument, than his Excellency's Honour, and the Armies or the Soldiers advantage.

They pray him not to receive any impreſſions, from theſe Imputations; profeſs their own Fidelity and Eſteem of the General's Perſon and Conduct, and their judgment that they ought to defend, not direct the Proceedings of thoſe by whoſe Authority they were raiſed. Subſcribed by Colonel Sir Robert Pye, Colonel Graves, Colonel Sheffield, Colonel Butler, Colonel Forteſcue, and others of Hollis's Party.

31. Letters from Bury informed, That at the Council of War at Bury, the General acquainted them with the Votes for Disbanding, and perſuaded them to a Compliance.

The Council of War, upon their Obſervation of the Condition of every Regiment, reſolved that the Votes would not be ſatisfactory, except ſix or ſeven of them; their Reaſons were, Becauſe eight Weeks Pay voted, was not a conſiderable part of their Arrears; and that no viſible ſecurity was given, for what ſhould not now be paid, and that nothing was done for their Vindication; they being declared Enemies they might be dealt with as Enemies when they came home, unleſs that Declaration were recalled. 23 Car.

After this a Petition was read which had been preſented to the General in the name of the private Soldiers of the Army, deſiring a general Rendezvouz of the Army before their Disbanding. It being an amazement to them, to hear that ſome of the Army were ſo ſoon to be disbanded, before all their Grievances redreſſed.

The Council of War reſolved to contract the Quarters of the Army nearer to the Head Quarter; in the mean time Ireton, and Lilburne, Okey, Rich, and Harriſon were appointed to draw up ſome Heads of Advice to be preſented to the General by the Council of War, not above five or ſix Officers differing from it.

They ſhow the neceſſity of the Officers complying with the Soldiers, who would have a general Rendezvouz, without their Officers, if not by their conſent, and the ſpoil to the Country by ſuch a diſorderly drawing together; and draw up a Declaration to the General to that purpoſe, paſt by all but four or five, and That his Excellency would be pleaſed to repreſent to the Parliament the condition of the Army, and that they would be pleaſed to reaſſume the Votes lately paſſed, and to ſuſpend any preſent proceeding upon them, and ſome ſatisfaction to be given to the Grievances of the Army.

Relation, That Colonel Fenwick's Troop in Ireland, defeated a Party under the Earl of Weſtmeath, on great diſadvantage, where Captain Farrington, one Lieutenant, one Enſign, and ſixty Soldiers of the Parliament's were ſlain, and the Rebels loſt three hundred: Wherein Captain Standley did gallantly, and of ſeveral other Succeſſes there.

My Friends in the Houſe, and ſome others who would have been rid of me, had moved, that I might be ſent Lord Juſtice into Ireland to exerciſe the Civil Government, as Field Marſhal Skippon was to command on the Military part, who was very willing to have my company; but I was not free to undertake that Charge in Ireland. And now Cromwell and his Party were againſt my going away, and more than formerly deſired my company, and began to uſe my Advice in many Things.

I received this Letter from Dr. Morley.

For my Honoured Friend Mr. Whitelocke.

SIR,

I Underſtand by Mr. J. Palmer and divers others of my Friends at London, how much the whole Univerſity in general, and I my ſelf in particular are obliged to you, for which in mine own and the Univerſity's name, I do return you moſt humble and hearty Thanks, which together with our hearty Prayers unto God for you, is the beſt and only acknowledgment which the Condition we are now in will ſuffer us to make to you or any of our Friends, and this we are afraid may be too much too; any Addreſs from ſo odious a Name as we are, carrying ſomething of Scandal if not of Danger to him to whom it is made along with it. Otherwiſe I do aſſure you, you had received publick Thanks in a publick way before this time. But we are adviſed by ſome of your Friends and ours, to abſtain from ſuch Expreſſions till there be a more ſeaſonable time for them; which yet not-

Anno 1647. withſtanding ſhall not hinder me from telling you that I am as ſenſible as any Man can be of the Obligation which I in particular have to you, and that there is nothing I would not willingly either do or ſuffer to make you know I am ſo. For the loſs of my Place here, though it was all I had for my Subſiſtence, yet ſeeing I could not keep it with a good Conſcience, I thank God it doth not trouble me at all, pray God he whoſoever he be that ſucceeds me in it may part with it at his Death as cheerfully as I do now; and that my Judges may not have cauſe to be more ſorry for their Sentence than I am. It is Glory enough for me that Mr. Selden, and Mr. Whitelocke were of another Opinion, for being abſolved by you two and mine own Conſcience, I ſhall ſtill think my ſelf in a capacity of a better Condition, and in the mean time not altogether unworthy to ſubſcribe my ſelf,

Your moſt obliged Friend,

and humble Servant,

G. Morley.

He declares, 'That they have not done, nor 'ſhall do any thing which they deſire to hide 'from the Parliament and the World, and ſhall 'not avow to the Faces of their Adverſaries, 'their Deſires to ſettle the King's Rights, he 'firſt giving his Concurrence to ſecure the 'Rights of the Kingdom, they have already de'clared publickly.

'That ſince their Papers ſent in to the Par'liament ſeveral Officers were ſent to the King, 'to ſatisfy him concerning thoſe Papers, and 'ſome others ſent to him about his Removes; 'in which Addreſſes they bargained not nor 'asked any thing of the King, as to any private 'Intereſt of their own.

'But they endeavoured only the Settlement 'of the publick Peace and Rights of the Na'tion, and aſſured the King, that this being 'done with his Concurrence, the Rights of his 'Majeſty and his Family ſhould be provided 'for, and in the mean time his Majeſty ſhould 'find from them all perſonal Civilities and Re'ſpects, and ſuch Freedom as may ſtand with 'Safety, and the Truſt lying upon them.

'That they are no Enemies to Monarchy, and 'Civil Government, that upon his Majeſty's Im'portunity (though with ſome Reluctancy) they 'did give way for the Duke of Richmond, and 'the two Chaplains to come to his Majeſty, 'as that which they thought reaſonable and 'juſt, and to make the King leſs prejudiced a'gainſt others.

'That they conceived, to avoid all Harſh'neſſes, and afford all Kindneſſes to his Ma'jeſty, conſiſting with the Peace and Safety of 'the Kingdom, is the moſt Chriſtian, honour'able, and prudent way, and that tender, equit'able, and moderate Dealing towards his Ma'jeſty, his Family, and Party, is the moſt hope'ful Courſe, to take away the Seeds of War, 'and Feuds amongſt us, and our Poſterity, and 'to procure a laſting Peace. 22. Car.

'And that being ſettled with the Rights and 'Liberties of the Nation, and Propagation of 'the Goſpel of Truth, and they honoured to be 'inſtrumental therein, they ſhall be willing to be 'diſmiſt, and be happy to be diſcharged, not 'only from military Employments, but from all 'Matters of Power whatſoever.'

Anno 1647. House of Commons, and kept the Door open, and their Hats on, and called out as they stood, Vote, Vote, and in this arrogant Posture stood till the Votes passed in that way, to repeal the Ordinance for Change of the Militia, and the Declaration.' In the Evening about seven a Clock some of the Common Council came down to the House, and understanding that they had in their presence forced the Speaker, and the Members to put the Question, and pass the Votes they required; now, so much of their work being done, they that put their Apprentices upon it, ordered them to disperse themselves again, and they presently obeyed the Orders of their Masters.

27. Here we may observe an instance of the highest Insolence in the Rabble, and of popular Madness that can be met with in any other story, and herein also a strange Providence of God, when the Differences betwixt the Parliament and Army, were so near breaking forth into a new War, that this grand Design to foment it should be ordered by God to the reconciling of it, as will appear by that which follows.

Such popular tumultuary Actions seldom prosper.

Both Houses met early, and Adjourned till the thirtieth of this Month.

The Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland ordered a Publick Fast.

1. To Lament the growth of Wickedness.
2. By reason of the Pestilence.

5. That the Parliament of England and the Synod of Divines may do their Duty.
6. For the Committee of Estates, that they may discern what is fittest to be done for securing that Kingdom, and encouraging their Brethren.
7. That God would grant to all his Grace to Repent, that he may remove his Wrath from us.

28. The monthly Fast.

Fairfax. The Common Council of London sat in the Morning, and again after the Sermons, then they received a Letter from Sir Thomas Fairfax, Of his affection to the City, and his dislike of the late Petition, and of the means to procure it.

Divers young Men then attended them, to express their readiness to stand up for the Privileges of the City, and to defend them against all Opposers.

City. The Common Council sent a Letter and Commissioners to the General, declaring their inclinableness to Peace; intreating his Excellency that the Army might not advance this way, nor intermeddle with the Rights and Privileges of the City.

Conceiving that their strengthning of the City for the preservation thereof, was no just cause to provoke the Soldiery, and as for the Petition, the Parliament had already declared their sense thereof, and it had never been formally presented to them.

Militia. 29. Militia of London ordered, That no Persons should disturb the Parliament; and if any did, the Commander of the Guards should prosecute his Commission to kill, and slay, &c.

Army. Upon Intelligence that the Army was advancing, Orders were given for the Trained Bands to go to the Works, and for Raising Auxiliaries, and all to come the next Morning, who were able to bear Arms; all this part of the Action, and that which follows, was contrived and directed by the Eleven Members, and their Friends. 22 Car. Eleven Members.

30. According to the Adjournment, some Members met in either House, but the Speakers came not; and after some expectation the Lords chose the Lord Grey, and the Commons then present chose Mr. Pelham, to be Speaker pro tempore, and Mr. Sergeant Birkhead not appearing, they put Mr. Norfolk into his Place; he made use of the City Mace, the other being carried away; and the Sergeant coming afterwards to offer his Service, was not admitted.

Then the House proceeded to Vote.

Votes.

Fairfax. A Letter from Sir Thomas Fairfax to the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council to this Effect.

Mentioning 'The Army's Compliance with 'their former Desire to remove to this distance, 'and the Assurance given them by the City, of 'their Concurrence for the Settlement of Peace 'and Liberty, against which they never offered 'one Objection, or ground of Dissent, and their 'Resolution to secure the Parliament, and their 'Privileges from any Violence or Attempt, the 'reason given by the City, for their late listing 'of new Forces.

'That upon this confidence the Army was dispos'd into several Parts for the ease of the Kingdom, to above one hundred and ten Miles distance, and had given up themselves to their 'Propos'als for a comfortable Settlement, and 'were in a hopeful way for the Relief of Ireland.

'That the Army cannot but be deeply sensible 'of the unparalleled Violation acted upon the 'Parliament on Monday last, by a Multitude from 'the City, because therein, the Guards sent from 'the City, did not only neglect their Duty for 'security of the Parliament from such Violence, 'and the whole City to yield any Relief to the 'Houses in that Extremity; but they are assured 'from Eye and Ear Witnesses, that divers of the 'Common Council gave great Encouragement 'to it;

'Which doth not only gain-say their former 'Professions, but does Violence to those many 'Obligations, that by their Charter, Protestation, and sundry other ways, lie upon them to 'protect the Parliament.

'That he cannot but look upon them who 'are in Authority, as accountable to the Kingdom for the Interruption of the hopeful way of

'Peace

Anno 1646. ‘ Peace and Settlement for this Nation; and for ‘ relieving Ireland, occaſioned by the late de- ‘ ſtructive Engagements, eſpecially, by the latter ‘ horrid and prodigious Force, done upon the ‘ Parliament; tending to diſſolve all Govern- ‘ ment.

‘ Upon which ſcore the Army and the whole ‘ Kingdom, ſhall have cauſe to put every thing ‘ of the like Nature, that may happen to the ‘ Parliament, or to any who are Friends to them, ‘ and to the Army, except by the Wiſdom, Care, ‘ and Induſtry of the City, the chief Actors may ‘ be detected, ſecured, and given up to Juſtice, ‘ and the beſt Endeavour uſed, to prevent the like ‘ for the future.’

Divers Officers of the Trained-Bands in Southwark, intreated the Common Council, That they might not go forth in an hoſtile manner under any Command, but ſuch as ſhould be approved of by the Generality of that Borough, and that they might be left to defend themſelves, and ſtand on their own Guard, and a Petition was preſented to the Common Council in the name of many Thouſands of well affected Citizens, praying that ſome means may be uſed for a Compoſure, &c. South-wark.

That they have recalled their late Declaration, and hope his Excellency will withhold his Soldiers from doing any prejudice to the City.

About two a Clock in the Morning Colonel Rainsborough's Brigade marched into Southwark without any oppoſition, the Soldiers carrying themſelves very civilly, and finding the Gates ſhut, and the Portcullis let down at the Bridge, and a Guard within, they planted two Pieces of Ordnance againſt the Gate, and ſet a Guard without, and in a ſhort time after the great Fort was yielded to them. 23 Car. Col Rainſborough.

That with freedom they may ſit to diſcharge their truſts, hath been the cauſe of his advance nearer London, and he is confident nothing ſhall paſs from the Army, but what ſhall be for the ſafety of the City.

And he doubts not though ſome diſaffected Perſons to the Peace of the Kingdom, have endeavoured to beget a miſunderſtanding between the Army and the City, hoping thereby to embroil the Kingdom in new Troubles; yet that the Army will ſo behave themſelves, as to witneſs to the World the Integrity of their Hearts, in having no other Deſign, but the quiet and happy ſettlement of a firm and laſting Peace, wherein

That he ſhould be diſcharged from being a Member of the Houſe, and committed to the Tower during the pleaſure of the Houſe.

The like Sentence was againſt Sir John Maynard, another of the eleven Members, for the like Offence, and farther, That an Impeachment of High Treaſon be drawn up againſt him.

Sir John Maynard was ſent to the Tower, and the Commitment of Mr. Glyn ſuſpended for a Week, that he might have time to ſort and deliver out his Papers concerning the City of London, and about his Clients at Law.

Here we may take notice of the Incertainty of worldly Favours and Affairs, The Lord Willoughby, a Perſon of as much Honour and Courage as any whom I have known, and one who had ventured as far as any Man of his quality, to ſerve the Parliament, and was deſervedly in their high Eſteem and Favour.

Now upon the getting up of another Faction among them, all his former great Services and Merits were not at all conſidered, but he became an Object of their Ill-will, and accuſed by them of High Treaſon to take away his Life, Fortune, and Honour. An ill Reward for all his gallant Services. It being the declared Tenent of Mr. Samuel Browne and others, That no former Services or Deſerts how great ſoever, were to be conſidered, or to avail a Man any thing, if he chance but by any one Action to fall into their Diſpleaſure, but that he ought to be proceeded againſt the rather with the more Severity. This is no great Encouragement to engage in publick Affairs.

The City importuned.

Some of the Citizens were put in mind, That not long ſince upon advance of the Army near them, they would then willingly have parted with a much greater Sum, to purchaſe the Favour of the Army, and Freedom from their Fears; and the Army having dealt ſo kindly with them, and not taking a Penny from any of them, when they had ſo great an Advantage againſt them; and the Army having now writ to them to deſire them to advance this Sum, it was wondred at, and they wiſhed to be well adviſed, that they did not too far provoke the Houſe, and the Army by denying of it fullenly.

Commiſſary Copley for aſſiſting in the late Tumults, and to promote a new War, was diſcharg'd of his Service in the Houſe, and committed to the Tower, and Captain Mulgrave for the ſame Offence was ſent Priſoner to Newgate.

Some private Treaties were ſaid to have been by ſome Officers of the Army with the King, and Inſtructions given by them, Cromwell and others, That if he would aſſent to their Propoſals, lower than thoſe of the Parliament, that the Army would ſettle him again in his Throne.

The King's Eſcape from Hampton Court.

This Night News came of the King's Eſcape from Hampton-Court, That the Officers who attended him wondring that he came not forth of his Chamber, where he had been writing moſt part of the Night before, they went in, and miſs'd him within half an Hour after his Departure; That Poſts were ſent into all Parts, to diſcover and ſtay him.

12. Letters from Lieutenant General Cromwell to the Houſe, of the King's going away, That the Commiſſioners, and Colonel Whaly miſſing him at Supper, went into his Chamber and found him gone, leaving his Cloak in the Gallery, as he went His Letters. the back way, and ſome Letters of his own hand writing upon the Table in his withdrawing-Room, to be communicated to the Parliament, to this Effect:

That Liberty, the thing now generally pretended and aimed at, was as neceſſary for Kings as any other, that he had a long time endured Captivity and Reſtraint, hoping it might tend to the Settlement of a good Peace, but finding the contrary, and the Unfixedneſs of the Army, and new Guards ſet upon him, he had withdrawn himſelf.

That whereſoever he ſhould be, he would earneſtly labour the Settlement of a good Peace, and to prevent the Effuſion of more Blood, and if he might be heard with Honour, Freedom, and Safety, he would inſtantly break through his Cloud of Retirement, and ſhew himſelf ready to be Pater Patriæ,

CHARLES REX.

King in the Iſle of Wight.

That riding upon the way in the Iſland, Mr. Aſhburnham and Sir John Berkley overtook him, and told him that the King was near, and would be with the Colonel this Night.

That he was come from Hampton-Court upon Information, that there were ſome, who intended to deſtroy his Perſon, that he could not with ſafety continue any longer there, and that finding his Caſe thus, choſe rather to put himſelf upon the Colonel, being a Member of the Army (whom he would not have left could he have had Security to his Perſon) than to go to any other Place.

That the Colonel being herewith exceedingly ſurprized, knew not at preſent what Courſe to take, but weighing the great Concernment that the Perſon of the King is of to the Settlement of the Peace of the Kingdom, he reſolved it his Duty to the King, the Parliament, and Kingdom, to uſe the utmoſt of his Endeavour to preſerve his Perſon from any ſuch horrid Attempt, and to bring him to a Place of Safety. 23 Car.

Where he may be alſo in a Capacity of anſwering the Expectation of the Parliament and Kingdom, in the Settlement of our Diſtractions. That he choſe (the King deſiring it) to bring him over into that Iſland, where he now is, and concludes with Profeſſions of his own Fidelity and Care.

At this Rendezvous Colonel Eyre, Major Scot, and ſome other Officers, who laboured to raiſe Sedition and Mutiny among the Soldiers, were committed into the Marſhal's Hands; others were committed for diſperſing factious Papers, as the Agreement of the People, &c. among the Soldiers, particularly in Colonel Lilburne's Regiment the moſt mutinous in the Army; Command was given for them, to tear and caſt away the Papers, which was done.

Captain Bray who was the only Officer above a Lieutenant left among them (the reſt being driven away by the mutinous Soldiers, and one of them wounded) was taken from the Head of that Regiment, and committed to cuſtody, for leading the Soldiers to this Rendezvous contrary to Orders.

Afterwards a Council of War being called in the Fields, divers Mutineers for Examples ſake were drawn forth, and three of them were tried and condemned to death; and one of them (to whoſe turn it fell by lot) was ſhot to death at the Head of the Regiment, and others taken into hold, to be tried for the ſame Mutiny; Colonel Rainsborough's and Colonel Harriſon's Regiments ſaw their Errors and ſubmitted.

The Lords deſired the Commons Concurrence to a Letter of Thanks to the General, and that the late Proceedings in London, tending to divide the Army, be examined; and that Proviſion be made for ſudden Pay for the Army for the future, and a ſatisfactory way for Arrears, and the Act of Indemnity to be full.

Lieutenant General Cromwell had the Thanks of the Houſe for his good Service at the Rendezvous, and the like ordered to all the Officers of the Army, who were active to ſuppreſs the mutinous Courſes.

The Commons deſired the Lords to appoint a Committee to preſent the Propoſitions to his Majeſty.

Order that Lieutenant General Cromwell do declare to the General, That the Houſe will be at all times ready to receive, and give ſuch Anſwer as is fitting, in a Parliamentary way, to ſuch humble Addreſſes as ſhall be made from the Army, to the Houſes by his Excellency.

The King's Letter. The King's Letter from the Iſle of Wight to the two Houſes, was to this Effect.

'That he ſuppoſed they had received the Letter 'which he left behind him at Hampton-Court; ac- 'cording to which, and being in a Place of more 'Security, than he was there, he ſtill deſires and 'endeavours the Settlement of an happy Peace; 'and becauſe Religion is the beſt and chiefeſt 'Foundation of Peace, he begins with that Par- 'ticular.

Religion. 'That for the aboliſhing of Arch-Biſhops, and 'Biſhops, &c. he clearly profeſſeth that he can- 'not give his Aſſent thereunto, as he is a Chriſtian, 'and a King.

'Not, as he is a Chriſtian, for he avows that he 'is ſatisfied in his Judgment, that this Order was 'placed in the Church by the Apoſtles themſelves; and ever ſince their time, hath continued in all Chriſtian Churches throughout the 'World, until this laſt Century of Years; and in 'this Church, in all times of Change and Reformation, it hath been upheld by the Wiſdom of 'his Anceſtors, as the great Preſerver of Doctrine, 'Diſcipline, and Order in the Service of God. 23 Car.

'That as a King, at his Coronation, he hath 'not only taken a ſolemn Oath to maintain this 'Order; but he, and his Predeceſſors in their 'Confirmation of the great Charter, have inſeparably woven the Rights of the Church, into 'the Liberties of the Subject.

'That yet he is willing it be provided, that the 'particular Biſhops perform their ſeveral Duties 'of their Callings, by their perſonal Reſidence, 'and frequent Preaching; and to exerciſe no Act 'of Juriſdiction or Ordination, without Conſent 'of their Presbyters; and will conſent, that their 'Powers in all things be ſo limited, that they be 'not grievous to the tender Conſciences of others; 'and ſees no Reaſon, why he alone, and thoſe of 'his Judgment ſhould be preſſed to a Violation 'of theirs.

'Nor can he conſent to the Alienations of 'Church-Lands, a Sin of the higheſt Sacrilege, 'and that ſubverts the Intentions of ſo many pious Donors, who have laid a heavy Curſe upon 'all prophane Violations; which his Majeſty is 'very unwilling to undergo, and believes it to be 'a Prejudice to the publick Good; many of his 'Subjects having the Benefit of renewing Leaſes 'at much eaſier Rates than if the Lands were private Mens; not omitting the Diſcouragement it 'will be to all Learning, and Induſtry, when ſuch 'eminent Rewards ſhall be taken away, which now 'lie open to the Children of the meaneſt Perſons.

'Yet to ſatisfy his two Houſes, he is content 'that the Presbyterian Government do continue as 'it is now ſettled for three Years, provided that 'he, and thoſe of his Judgment be not compelled 'to comply therewith, and that a Conſultation 'about Settlement of Church-Government be by 'the Aſſembly, with twenty Divines to be added 'to them, of the King's Nomination.

'That in the Settlement of the Church Govern- 'ment, there be full Liberty to all thoſe, who ſhall 'differ on conſcientious Grounds, from that Set- 'tlement, provided that nothing be underſtood to 'tolerate thoſe of the Popiſh Profeſſion; nor ex- 'empting any Popiſh Recuſant from the Penalties 'of the Laws, or to tolerate the publick Profeſſion 'of Atheiſm and Blaſphemy, contrary to the 'Doctrine of the Apoſtles, Nicene, Athanaſian 'Creeds; they having been received by, and had 'in Reverence of all the Chriſtian Churches, and 'more particularly by this of England, ever ſince 'the Reformation.

'As to the Militia, which he avows an inſepara- Militia. 'ble Right of his Crown, he cannot diveſt himſelf and his Succeſſors of the Power of the 'Sword; yet he will conſent to an Act of Parliament, to place the Power of the Militia during his Reign in the two Houſes of Parliament, 'and after his Reign to return to the Crown.

'As to Payment of the Arrears of the Army he 'will conſent, if the Houſe will remit to him 'ſome Benefit of Sequeſtrations, Compoſitions, 'the Aſſiſtance of the Clergy, and the Arrears of 'his own Revenue, to pay within eighteen 'Months, four hundred thouſand Pounds to the 'Army, and if that be not ſufficient, he will give 'way

Anno 1647. 'way for the Sale of Foreſt-Lands for that pur-
'poſe.

'For Payment of other publick Debts he will 'conſent to ſuch Acts as the Parliament ſhall agree 'upon; and to an Act for the naming of Officers 'of State, and Privy Councellors during his Reign, 'by both Houſes of Parliament; the Commiſſions 'to be in his Name, and after his Reign, this 'Right to return to the Crown.

'He will conſent to the taking away of the 'Court of Wards, ſo as a full Recompence be ſet-'tled upon him in perpetuity.

'That he will conſent to an Act to make null 'all Declarations, &c. and to an Act of Oblivion, 'that he will give ſatisfaction concerning Ireland; 'and although he cannot in Honour conſent to 'make void all his own Grants under his Great 'Seal, and to confirm all Acts under the Great 'Seal at Weſtminſter, yet he doubts not but upon 'ſome Propoſals to give ſatisfaction therein to his 'two Houſes.

'He earneſtly deſires a perſonal Treaty at Lon-'don in Honour, Freedom, and Safety with his 'two Houſes, as the only Means to ſettle Peace. 'And then he deſires that the Propoſals of the 'Army, as to future Parliaments and Elections, 'may be conſidered.

20. Debate for raiſing Money for the Army, and upon a Letter from the General to the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Common Council of London, and another to the Committee of the Army,

Colonel Hewſon. That the General had ordered Colonel Hewſon's Regiment to quarter in the City, to aſſiſt the Committee in collecting the Arrears due to the Army.

The Houſe ordered Lieutenant General Cromwell to write to Colonel Hewſon to forbear marching into the City, and a Committee of Lords and Commons were appointed to acquaint the Common-Council with the Inconveniences that might ariſe, if they did not ſpeedily collect the Arrears due to the Army.

Both Houſes ordered their Committee to preſs the Scots Commiſſioners to conſent to the ſending of the Propoſitions to his Majeſty.

Order about placing ſome of the King's Servants about him.

Colonel Jones. Letters from Ireland informed a late and great Defeat given by Colonel Jones to the Rebels, and that he had beat them off from before Dublin.

The General's Head-Quarters were at Windſor.

Mr. Bath a Member of the Houſe was buried, an induſtrious and honeſt Gentleman.

22. The Ordinance committed for ſetting the Poor to work.

City. Some from the Common Council came to the Houſe, with Thanks for their Care to prevent Quartering of Soldiers in the City, and with an Anſwer in writing concerning collecting of the Arrears of the Aſſeſſments, and that they had given an Account of it by a Letter to the General.

The Houſe ordered a Committee to prepare an Anſwer to the City, and voted, That they ſhould go on to collect the Arrears, and ſpeedily to bring them in.

Order to preſs the Scots Commiſſioners for their Anſwer touching the Propoſitions, That the ſending of them to his Majeſty may not be farther delayed.

Letters from Colonel Hammond, That he received by the Hands of a Meſſenger from the General, the Votes and Reſolutions of both Houſes relating to the Security of his Majeſty's Perſon.

That as to the Vote, not to permit ſuch as have been in Arms, or aſſiſted againſt the Parliament to come into the Iſland, he had before taken Order; and touching the Votes laſt come to his Hands, he will with the beſt of his Endeavours ſee them put in Execution. 23 Car.

That as to a Warrant for apprehending Mr. Aſhburnham, Mr. Leg, and Sir Jo. Berkley, he deſired the Sergeants Deputy to forbear the Execution thereof till he might know the further Pleaſure of the Houſes; in regard, if thoſe Gentlemen ſhould be apprehended, it would be very difficult for him to ſecure the Perſon of his Majeſty.

That the King ſaid, If theſe Gentlemen ſhould be taken from him, and puniſhed as Evil-doers, for counſelling him not to go out of the Kingdom, but rather to come to this Place, for the more Conveniency as to Settlement of Peace, and for endeavouring it accordingly, in attending him hither; he cannot but himſelf expect to be dealt with accordingly, his Caſe being the ſame.

That theſe Gentlemen have engaged their Honours not to depart from him, and having caſt themſelves upon him, in caſe they ſhould be removed from thence, it would much reflect upon him.

23. A Petition directed to the ſupreme Authority of the Nation, preſented to the Commons, was read and voted to be a ſeditious and contemptuous Avowing and Proſecution of a former Petition, and Paper annexed, ſtiled, an Agreement of the People, formerly adjudged by the Houſe to be deſtructive to the Being of Parliaments, and fundamental Laws of this Kingdom. Seditious Petition.

Some of the chief Actors herein were committed to the Gate-houſe, others to Newgate, and a Letter ſent to the General to proſecute the Examination of that Buſineſs to the bottom; and to bring ſuch guilty Perſons as he ſhall think fit to exemplary Puniſhment.

Letters from Briſtol, of a Mutiny in the Garriſon, and that the Soldiers had ſecured an Alderman there, till they had a Month's Pay; the Houſe ſent a Letter to the General to diſcharge the Alderman, and to prevent the like Abuſes by the Soldiers for the future.

24. The Monthly Faſt-day.

25. Order to preſs the Scots Commiſſioners for a further and ſpeedy Anſwer touching the Propoſitions to be preſented to his Majeſty, and to take off the Commiſſioner's Seal of his Bed-Chamber at Hampton-Court.

Some from the Aſſembly preſented the ſhort Catechiſm to the Houſe, who gave them Thanks, and deſired them to give a ſpeedy Anſwer to the Queries formerly ſent them, and to perfect thoſe things referr'd to them. Aſſembly.

A Letter to the General from Buckinghamſhire, complaining of the unſufferable Burden of free Quarter, ſent by him to the Houſe, and referr'd to the grand Committee, who are to conſider of taking off free Quarter, and ſettling a conſtant Pay for the Army.

The Merchant Adventurers lent ten thouſand Pounds towards the Month's Pay for the Army.

Letters from the General to the City, why he appointed ſome Soldiers to aſſiſt in collecting the Arrears of the Aſſeſſments, that he ſubmitted to what the Parliament had order'd concerning the Stop of that Courſe, and hoped the City would perform their Undertaking in the ſpeedy collecting of them, otherwiſe it might be very inconvenient to the Parliament, the Army, and Kingdom, and themſelves.

I attended the Houſe, and laboured in my Profeſſion.

26. The

Anno 1647.

26. The Grand Committee ſat about Pay for the Army, and order'd the disbanding of the Supernumerary Forces.

Lords Conference.

At a Conference the Lords acquainted the Commons, That they had conſidered the Deſires of the King to treat with the Parliament; and the Scots Papers, and the Deſires of the Kingdom, to be delivered from all Burdens and Fears, and to be preſerved in Peace.

That their Lordſhips propound to the Commons four Propoſitions to be ſpeedily ſent to his Majeſty to be ſpeedily paſſed for the Safety and Security of the Parliament and Kingdom, and to treat with his Majeſty upon the reſt. The Propoſitions were,

1. That a Bill be paſſed for ſettling the Militia of this Kingdom.

2. That an Act be paſſed for calling in of all Declarations, Oaths and Proclamations againſt the Parliament, and thoſe who adhered to them.

3. For an Act, that thoſe Lords who were made after the Great Seal was carried to Oxford, may be made uncapable of ſitting in the Houſe of Peers thereby.

4. That Power be given to the two Houſes of Parliament to adjourn as they ſhall think fit.

That his Majeſty giving the Kingdom Security, by paſſing theſe four Propoſitions, there may be a perſonal Treaty with his Majeſty and the Parliaments of both Kingdoms for paſſing the reſt of the Propoſitions.

Herein they deſired the Commons Concurrence, who appointed a time to debate this Buſineſs fully.

For diſſolving the Parliament.

A Repreſentation was preſented to the General, under the Hands of Colonel Lilburne, and the Officers of his Regiment, acknowledging and promiſing their Obedience due to the General, and praying him to mind the Parliament of conſidering and reſolving thoſe things which have been preſented to them from the Army, and as ſoon as the neceſſary great Affairs firſt to be ſettled ſhall be tranſacted, that a Period may be ſet to this Parliament.

Some thought it a Piece of high Aſſumption in the Army, ſo often and ſo earneſtly to preſs the diſſolving of that Authority, under which themſelves had ſo highly acted.

Some of the Officers were ſuppoſed to have Hopes of coming in themſelves to be Members of Parliament upon new Elections; others were thought to act upon better Principles of the Nation's Freedom, by not being ſubjected too long to the ſame Perſons in Authority.

I was at the Chancery Bar before Seven a Clock this Morning, yet the Commiſſioners were ſat almoſt an Hour before. I alſo attended the Houſe.

27. Order of both Houſes for Mr. Sollicitor to draw up Pardons for ſome convicted Perſons at Northampton.

The Lords deſired the Commons to take a ſpeedy courſe for conſtant Pay for the Army, that the Countries may not be burdened with free Quarter.

A Committee appointed to find out the Authors of Mercurius Pragmaticus, and Mercurius Melancholicus, and other Pamphlets ſcandalous to the Parliament, to puniſh them, and the Printers, and Sellers of them, and to ſeize the Impreſſions of them.

The Commons agreed with the Lords to have a perſonal Treaty with the King, after he ſhould have ſigned the four Propoſitions agreed on by the Lords, which were to be ſent to his Majeſty. 23 Car. Perſonal Treaty.

29. Order that the Earl of Kent, Sir Thomas Widdrington Knight, and Bulſtrode Whitelocke Eſquire, ſhall be Commiſſioners for the Great Seal of England, and that an Ordinance be brought in accordingly. Commiſſioners of the Great Seal.

Which Ordinance was brought in and read, and paſſed the Houſe of Commons, and ordered to be ſent to the Houſe of Lords for their Concurrence.

Theſe Commiſſioners were ſaid to be agreed upon by the private junčto of Cromwell's Party before-hand, to be truſted with this great Charge; and in the Debate of the Buſineſs, ſeveral others of both Houſes were propounded; but after a great Debate theſe three only were pitched upon.

The Earl of Kent being a very honeſt, juſt Man, of good rational Parts, and Abilities, and of an ancient great Family, who would be a Countenance to this Buſineſs, was held a fit Perſon for the Lords Houſe.

Sir Thomas Widdrington being a Gentleman of known Integrity, and of great Abilities in his Profeſſion, and Brother in Law to the General, whoſe Siſter he had married, was very fit to be one of the Houſe of Commons to be intruſted with ſo weighty an Employment.

I was leſs conſiderable than the other in all Reſpects, yet was well known and underſtood in the Houſe, by my long Attendance there, and by them judged not uncapable of this Employment; beſides the General had an Affection for me, and he had a good Intereſt in the Houſe, and Cromwell and his Party were willing to engage me as far as they could with them.

I can truly ſay I never heard of this Buſineſs before hand, nor was in the leaſt privy to it, or acquainted with it; but God was pleaſed ſo to order it, not my Ambition that ſought or contrived it, for I may be believed on much Experience that ſuch Employments are not deſireable by a quiet and prudent Spirit, they ſeldom afford quiet, never ſafety; I was at this time in the Circuit in great Practice, wherein none of my Profeſſion had a greater ſhare than my ſelf, and at Glouceſter received this unexpected News; the Counſel, the Officers, and Attorneys with great Reſpect and much Civility wiſhed me Joy of that honourable Employment. I ſent to my Friends of the Houſe to know if my preſent Attendance was expected by the Houſe; but that without a ſpecial Summons I did not intend to return to London, till after the Circuit ſhould be ended. This Reſolution I the rather grounded upon the Letters I received, wherein it was ſaid, that when it was moved in the Houſe, I ſhould be immediately ſent for to attend the Service of the Seal, others did not think fit to call me out of the Circuit, where I was engaged in many Mens Buſineſſes, and the Houſe made no Order for it.

Then they complained againſt their preſent Governor, Colonel Overton, for impoſing upon them free Billet for his Soldiers, when free Quarter was taken off from all the Country, and they hoped to reap the Fruits of Peace and Settlement, and they pray Relief herein from his Excellency.

Tumult of Apprentices.

9. There happened this Night a very high and dangerous Tumult by the Apprentices, who, with other People and Malignants who inſtigated them, went towards the Soldiers at Whitehall, and the Meuſe, but were met with in the way by a Party of Horſe, who killed ſome, and wounded many of them, and ſcoured the Streets.

It began in Moorfields about tipling and gaming on the Lord's-day, contrary to the Ordinance of Parliament, they ſet upon, and overpowered a Party of the Trained Bands about Finnesbury, and from thence went to White-Chapel, where they ſeized upon the Captains Colours; and others went to Smithfield, and ſome to Whitehall, but they were met with by the Horſe and diſperſed.

10. The laſt Night they increaſed, and ſurprized Newgate and Ludgate, took the Keys, went to the Lord Mayor's, and took thence a Drake, in which Action ſome of them were ſlain; the Drake they brought to Ludgate, the Lord Mayor left his Houſe, and went to the Tower.

This Morning their Numbers increaſed, and they laboured to get Arms, broke up a Houſe in Milk-ſtreet, and took out Arms from thence, and other Places, with the Drake they went to Leaden-Hall, where they poſſeſſed the Magazine, and beat up Drums upon the Water, to invite the Seamen and Watermen for God, and King Charles.

Upon this high Tumult the General ſat up all Night, called a Council of War, where the Queſtion was, whether they ſhould hazard the two Regiments at the Meuſe and Whitehall, or ſtay for more Force; and they agreed, rather than to delay this Buſineſs farther, which muſt needs be dangerous and hazard much Blood, and Increaſe of the Mutiny, that they would engage with the two Regiments only.

Accordingly this Morning early, the two Regiments entred at Alderſgate, and came to Leaden-hall, and charged the Mutineers, they fired their Drake, hurt Captain Merriman in the Shoulder, and his Lieutenant in the Belly, and killed a Woman.

The Soldiers hurt many of the Mutineers, a Waterman, who ſhot off the Drake, was killed, divers Priſoners were taken, the Mutineers in all Parts of the City were preſently diſperſed, the City Gates ſet open, and all quiet before ten a-clock this Morning throughout the City.

This ſmall Party of the Army behaved themſelves againſt a great Multitude of Men, with much Gallantry and Reſolution; and it was no ſmall Happineſs to the Parliament, that this Inſurrection was well quieted, which in theſe times of Diſcontent and Diſtraction, (if it had not been ſo ſoon appeaſed, and nipped in the Bud) might have proved of moſt dangerous Conſequence to all the Parliament Party, and have occaſioned a new War.

We may take notice of the Incertainty of worldly Affairs, when the Parliament and their Army had ſubdued their common Enemy, then they quarrelled among themſelves, the Army againſt the Parliament; when they were pretty well pieced together again, then the Apprentices and others make an Inſurrection againſt the Parliament and Army.

Thus we were in continual Perplexities and Dangers, and ſo it will be with all who ſhall engage in the like Troubles.
